THE MISSOURI DISASTER

Graphic Details of the Destruction of the Steamer.

Narratives of Five Survivors—A Terrible Story of Danger and Suffering—How the Boats were Handled.

The steamer Marco Castle, from Havana, arrived at this port yesterday, having on board the twelve survivors of the ill-fated steam-ship Missouri, which was burned at sea on the 2d inst., while off Abaco Light, in the Bahamas.

We find in our Nassau, N. P., files the following interesting details of the disaster:

THE SURVIVORS AT NASSAU.

About 3 P. M. of Sunday, the passenger Lady Pakenham arrived here from Abaco, and reported that the schooner Spy was then on her way to that port with the survivors. From that hour until early the next morning the counting-house of Messrs. T. Darling & Co., the agents for the steamer, was thronged with persons anxious to ascertain the particulars of the disaster. At about 8 o'clock A. M. of Monday, the schooner Spy arrived with the survivors, who proved to be Mr. J. W. Culmer, and Mr. Tunnell, two gentlemen belonging to this city, four other passengers, five of the crew, and a man named Ebenezer Saunders, a seaman of the ill-fated Lady Pike, of Cleveland, the loss of the R. V. Hotel, who was also on board of the Missouri at the time of her loss. Then only were the mournful details of the circumstances attending the destruction of the unfortunate steamer scattered with celerity. A sufficient number of persons conversant with the disaster has been obtained by us from Messrs. Culmer and Tunnell, and it discloses a record of mismanagement, negligence and disorder horrifying to record.

LIST OF THE SAVED.

The following is a correct list of the persons who were saved from the Missouri:

Gen. Thackeray, passenger to Havana.
J. E. Gesterbacker, passenger to Havana.
Enrique Vance, passenger to Havana.
James W. Culmer, passenger to Nassau.
W. F. Tunnell, passenger to Nassau.
John Robein, passenger to Nassau.
Ebenezer Saunders, passenger to Nassau.
Wm. Jones, seaman.
Lewis Boume, chief pantryman.
Richard Murphy, chief pantryman.
Patrick McGowen, waiter.

THE VOYAGE.

The Missouri left New-York on Friday morning, with about ninety-three persons, all told, on board. She was hastily prepared for the voyage but a few days before, so hastily, indeed, as to leave but little room for doubt that the necessary precautions for her safety had not been taken, for we hear of the letting of packing around her boilers, placed to prevent the heat from igniting the wood-work of the vessel, had been hurriedly fitted throughout the night previous to her sailing. At 10 o'clock of that night the material for this purpose by Henry Dubois, of Nassau, Oak St., was still in place, and, although it is asserted that for the persistence of the inspector of the port, the Missouri would have been sent to sea without it. The steamer progressed safely on her voyage until Tuesday morning, when, being about twenty-five miles to the north of Abaco, she was discovered to be on fire. Alarm was given, which was quickly suppressed for a few minutes, when it was again repeated, and it was then discovered that the centre of the ship was on fire. The flames being seen to issue from the stokes hole, in a very short time after the alarm, they rapidly sprang from side to side, forming an impassable barrier between her bows and stern. Order and discipline, properly maintained, might have secured the salvation of those on board, if not of the vessel; but, instead of this, the most negligent exposure and, as a few hands but a small number, of the crew of the Missouri were left to tell the tale of her entire destruction. No one seemed to have any control over the ship or her crew, boats were hastily launched as well as they could be, the manner in which they were lowered or launched being left to the chance of getting them over her sides. Meanwhile nothing was being done toward arresting the progress of the fire, and a panic among her passengers, only now completely known to those of the few who retained their presence of mind sufficiently to assist in saving the vessel. But four boats seem to have got clear of the ship. One contained those who were fortunate enough to reach the land; another, filled with water, had to be emptied by bailing; a third was stove in bottom up, with two men clinging to her, and a fourth was at some distance with a larger number. Of these latter we fear nothing will ever be heard.

Sad, indeed, is the description given us of the cluster of this tragic scene, in which numbers of children were crowded together, exposed to the most horrible of deaths without the slightest chance of saving their lives being afforded them.

The responsibility of this catastrophe indisputably rests on those who sent the Missouri to sea in the condition she was in, and we trust that the Government of the United States will see the imperative necessity of instituting a strict inquiry into the matter; a matter which is of the greatest importance, not only to their citizens, but to all others who may have the misfortune to be obliged to travel by the steamers of this and other American companies.

STATEMENT OF J. W. CULMER.

The Atlantic mail steam-ship Missouri, Green commanding, sailed from New-York on Friday morning, the 8th instant, and from the commencement of the voyage the machinery worked badly, the ship making very slow time; light winds from the north until the 31st, when it blew strong from the north-east, with a heavy sea running. On Tuesday, the 29th, at 9 A. M., being in latitude 26° 40', longitude 76° 30', the alarm of fire was given, when the passengers, who were at breakfast, and the crew, all rushed to the main deck. A scene of great disorder and confusion ensued, and no attempt was made to stay the progress of the flames, which advanced rapidly. Some of the boats were lowered, but getting entangled and somehow manded for which it was designed, they swamped alongside of them turning bottom up. The boats we were in was the only one not filled with water. After we had cleared the ship we saw one boat with two men on her bottom, and another filled with water with nine men in her. We tried to reach the boat with the two men, but failed; came up with the other with nine men, gave them a bucket to bail with. We saw another boat some distance off, with about fifteen persons in her, but she was also filled with water. After laying around for nearly two hours, the boat was given in charge of the second officer, who shaped for Abaco. In five hours time we saw land, and in two hours more succeeded in landing on Great Guana Cay. We hauled the boat up on the beach, and stayed there during that night. On the morning of the 31st we endeavored to reach Hope Town, but at 8 P. M. were picked up by the schooner Spy, bound for that port. On our arrival at Hope Town I dispatched vessels in search of the missing boats, but they returned without finding any of them. I am afraid that there is but little possibility of any others of the passengers being saved. This is but a brief account of the loss of the Missouri, but the few facts I have mentioned may be relied on as correct.

STATEMENT OF W. F. TUNNELL.

The Atlantic Mail Steam-ship Company's steamer Missouri, sailed on a trip from New-York on the afternoon of the 11th inst., did not leave the wharf until 4 A. M. on the morning of the 12th, in consequence of new fitting being required around her boilers. We steamed slowly out of the harbor, and meeting a note unpleasant weather the voyage dragged on until on Tuesday morning, the 29th, when the cry of fire was given. I immediately saw the chief steward, Mr. Lake, take a bucket of water and run toward the engine-room, and, on returning, he remarked, "it is nothing but a box of matches, and it is all out," but while he was uttering these words, I heard distinct cries of "Fire! fire!" which seemed to come from the engine-room. Then followed a perfect stampede to gain the deck, so as to ascertain the origin of the fire, and to devise some means to extinguish it; but all human efforts seemed of no avail, and in a few minutes the flames were beyond control, and we had to resort to hurricane decks. Orders were given to cut the engine, and efforts made to lower the boats. The first boat lowered was the after one on the weather or port side, and before it reached the water there were nine starts her, principally Chinese, who said she boat beneath to them. All safety seemed concerned, and running alongside of a boat that had just been launched from the hurricane deck, filled with people, and at the same moment heard the order given to cut away the painter. I lost no time in cutting a piece of rope about ten or fifteen feet long, and making it fast to the rail, "lowered myself down and awaiting an opportunity to let go, but finding my position critical, occasioned by the boat's rolling of the ship, I dropped into the sea, and although at the moment the painter of the boat had been cut and the boat shoved off, but by swimming five yards I succeeded in reaching and by the assistance of one of the passengers was pulled in the boat. Our first thoughts then were to rescue some of our fellow-creatures from a watery grave, and arranging boat with two oars on her bent, we endeavored to assist her, but, after a pull of two hours, found it impossible, [illegible] the crew, male and female, were then prevailing. I did, however, succeed in throwing a marker to the boat that contained the female and told them to try and reach it.

As we, meanwhile, all apparently calm, I proceeded to assume a captain in the boat, and selected Capt. James W. Culmer, who I knew to be an experienced mariner, I would here remark that too much praise cannot be bestowed on our sailors Capt. Culmer, who, in the hour of peril, showed his great self-possession, and, as a consequence, guided our boat through the surf to the shore, and we all, under Providence, owe our deliverance from a fearful death to him. We collected a landing about dark, cold, wet, hungry, and thirsty, and remained on the beach until day light Wednesday morning, when we launched our boat and endeavored to find a settlement, and as nothing better could be found in the shape of a breakfast than raw grass, some of us captured a few of them and made a scanty meal. About 3 P. M. we were picked up by the schooner Spy, and taken for Great Harbor, Abaco, where we remained until Friday morning, and arrived at Nassau in the same on Monday morning at 8 o'clock.

I have no hope whatever of the safety of the rest of the passengers and crew, who evidently perished in the flames or found a watery grave.

STATEMENT OF OTHER SURVIVORS.

The following narratives were obtained through the courtesy of R. J. Albert, the Purser of the Morro Castle:

Richard Murphy, the second pantryman, gives the following narrative:

On the morning of Oct. 29, about 8:30 A. M., fire was discovered in port locker of the pantry, which was then about two feet from the locker; when a boy from the dining-saloon came in to get the plate baskets, and he opened the locker he cried out "fire;" I saw the fire and assisted him to pull out the buckets (metal No.) and threw the starboard bucket down the fire; then ran and brought a bucket of water and threw it into the fire, and announced the fire all out, but the smoke still continued; I went out on the starboard gangway and looking through the window of the engine-room that the fire was burning at the head of the stairs leading to the fire-room; I stood at two minutes to see what was to be done; in putting out the fire; no effort was made, as the smoke drove all aft. In going up the stairs I saw a colored woman with the children sitting in the corner; when I got on deck I saw Capt. Green talking to Capt. Culmer; he asked if it were not better to stop the engines; the wind cool; they were stopped and the chief steward called the up on deck to get buckets; when I got on the hurricane deck, Capt. Green was giving orders to get the boats out; he was working himself and the two mates with him; I assisted the mate in the boat; the mate of Jones with reference to the number of boats, she pulled off and on for two hours, but we were unable to get to windward of wreck on account of the sea, but we endeavored to get near the swamped boat; we gave them one bucket; we had but two; in the boat were the following: The first mate, third officer, second, chief's barber, quartermaster, two oilers and three firemen; we then went to a boat bottom side up, on which were two sailors, but the sea was so heavy, despite all our efforts we failed to give them any assistance; we then pulled toward the land, and arrived about 4 o'clock; there were no inhabitants on the side of the island on which we landed; made a bed of the leaves of the trees, and in the morning we pulled the boat across the island toward the sugar plantations, where we got some sugar-cane; we then launched the boat and at about 2½ P. M. we got off, landing at the Port of Nassau, Oak St. Keys; we pulled out into the stream; Capt. Culmer put a shirt on a stick, and attracted the attention of those on board; we were taken on board about 3 P. M.; they treated us very well, and we reached Great Harbor, Elbow Key; the authorities gave us clothes, as we were almost naked.

Louis Bohme, another pantryman, gave the following additional details:

I was near the port pantry locker; one of the men in the steward's department was taking some metallic plate baskets from the locker, when the fire broke out suddenly and shouted "fire!" I went to the locker and saw flames; a wet carpet was on the deck and I threw it in the locker upon the fire; I also seized a fire bucket full of water, and threw it upon the fire; this seemed to subdue the flames; I went out and reported to the fire-man; notwithstanding, the Captain ordered the engine to be placed and put to work; when I turned to go aft again the flames had broken out through the engine-room grating so violently that the pumps were no use. Almost at the same moment that the fire was beyond the control of the pumps, Capt. Green gave orders to launch and man the boats. The fire at this time broke through the hurricane deck and swept aft and starboard with fearful violence; I went in search of a life-preserver; having obtained it I thought that I could save some clothes, but when I went below to get them the smoke was so blinding that I was forced to desist. A large metallic life-boat was placed amidships, and the mate and other officers had the appliances for launching. It was slid along the hurricane and quarter decks to the stern and launched over it. I slid down the painter and got into the boat. At this time, as far as I could see, the Captain and passengers were not at all excited. Twenty-five or thirty men in the boat and one of them was needed to steer by. We endeavored to go around the vessel to the windward side, but found that the high sea made it too dangerous. After laying around the ship for two hours we started for land, which we made in about seven hours.

William Jones, one of the seamen of the Missouri, tells the following story:

We had reached a point about twenty-five miles north-east of Elbow Key, a small island of the Bahama group; on Oct. 29, at 8:40 A. M., I was in the forward shooting, reefing the foresail, when the alarm of fire was given. All the officers were on deck. I heard the order to attach the hose to the donkey pump; the fire gained so rapidly that the donkey pump became useless, and we had to rely alone upon the starboard hand-pump; when the fire broke out the passengers were all at breakfast. I left the starboard side, and came upon deck; the officers and passengers all seemed cool and collected; as far as I could see, the fire at that time was breaking out through one grating of the dagger-room. A heavy gale was blowing from the eastward and right ahead; it drove the fire beside and underneath the deck. When the fire broke out the ship was about 70 miles from the port; in a few minutes all that part of the vessel near amidships was aflame. I could only see three boats launched. One was stoved, and a few minutes after our boat had got off all right I saw some men clambering to one side, while the other with blind men was filled with water. All that was known to be saved were in my boat. We stayed off and on around the steamer for two hours. The sea was running so high that our only safety was at the lee of the vessel, and the smoke was so dense that we were unable to see the boats. We saw no one left in danger. Columbus Lockwood, a seaman and a resident of the neighboring islands, took charge of the boat as far as any one could or seen to have charge. Seven passengers and five of the crew were in our boat. After doing all in our power to succor others, we pulled for the land, which lay south-west, and in twenty hours we landed at the Great Guana Cay. We hauled the boat up on the beach, and stayed there during that night. On the morning of the 31st we endeavored to reach Hope Town, but at 8 P. M. were picked up by the schooner Spy, bound for that port. On our arrival at Hope Town I dispatched vessels in search of the missing boats, but they returned without finding any of them. I am afraid that there is but little possibility of any others of the passengers being saved. This is but a brief account of the loss of the Missouri, but the few facts I have mentioned may be relied on as correct.

Burned Days Without Food.

Capt. John Mitchell, of Baltimore, father of the commander of the bark Wild Gazelle which was recently abandoned at sea, has received a letter from his son detailing the disaster. The vessel sailed from Baltimore on the 8th August, under command of Capt. James H. Mitchell, for Pernambuco, and was abandoned at sea September 1. The crew, consisting of seven men, were rescued seven days after the wreck by Mr. F. H. Strelbock, of New-Jersey, a passenger, who was washed from the wreck and drowned. Capt. Mitchell's letter is as follows:

HAVRE, Oct. 20, 1872.

DEAR FATHER: I suppose you will be surprised to see my letter dated as above. When only ten days sail from Cape Henry we had the misfortune to be wrecked in a hurricane, about 120 miles to the eastward of Bermuda. The bark was lying to, it blowing very heavy, with a high sea running. The vessel lay very well until about 9 o'clock at night, when she all at once began swing over on her beam ends. We commenced cutting away the fore and main masts, but before the masts gave way she was on her beam ends. After laying so for about an hour the masts gave way and the vessel, but full of water, with house of deck and cabin all gone. After the righted found that the passenger (Mr. F. H. Strelbock, of New-Jersey) had been washed overboard. The remainder of us took refuge in and about the mizzen rigging, the sea breaking over us all night. After daylight found that the sea was not breaking over the vessel forward, and we succeeded in getting aboard, when we found the two missing seamen, but the passenger, poor fellow, was gone, he having been washed overboard from off the poop deck. During the day we formed a raft to launch in case the bark should go to pieces. About sunset we saw a vessel to leeward, made signal from the mizzen masthead, but she did not come near us. We then saw a vessel to windward, we were taken from the wreck by the French bark Hortense, Capt. Dumontry, and arrived on this port Friday, having been forty-three days on board the Hortense. During the time we were on the wreck we had for the seven days neither food nor water, but we had one small fish about the size of a perch, that was washed on board, and about a mouthful of rainwater at all. We endeavored to break the deck up to the hatches, but it was moderate enough to do so, in the hope of getting at some canned meats that were in the room, but without success. The officers and crew of the French bark were very kind to us, treating us all the starving days could spare, as we saved nothing but what we stood in. I hope to come home by steamer soon.

Your affectionate son,
JAMES H. MITCHELL.

FARO AND KENO.

A Few of the Gaming-Houses in the Fifth-ward Precinct—Some of Emigrate.

The attention of the authorities has repeatedly been called to the alarming increase of gambling dens in this City. They still remain undisturbed, and their proprietors are allowed to carry on their business almost with impunity. Without again commenting the many foul and base crimes which have been committed in these columns, the scope of this article will be confined to the Fifteenth Police Precinct, which contains a number of these dens, which, a stone's throw of Police Head-quarters. Indeed, it is a fact that several of the officials are on terms of intimacy with the more notorious of the gamblers, and that good reasons exist for a belief that a secret channel is kept open between the gamblers and certain officials in high position, through which the ill-gotten gains of the gambling table are equitably divided.

Commencing at No. 520 Broadway, west side, a few doors north of Bleecker-street, is the house of Joseph Jarrell and Charles Miles. It has the reputation of being one of the worst gambling places in the City. The gang of "roperers" for this den can be seen at almost every hour of the day, but more particularly in the evening when the throngs of people in the street, at the Grand Central Hotel. They hang about the hot and billiard-saloons, and pose in statuesque attitude around the hotel entrance. When they see an individual who appears to be a desirable victim, they approach in a very courteous manner, and address him as an old acquaintance. The "roper" is told by the unknown victim that he must be mistaken, the two have never met before. It is as stated by the former that a previous meeting has taken place. A friend of the "roper's," standing conveniently by, is introduced to the stranger, and the latter is invited to take a drink and renew the pleasant old acquaintanship. In too many instances the stranger is so flattered and deceived by the unbounded civility shown him, that he falls readily into the trap. He is induced to visit the gambling hell, to take a glass or two of wine, and after this has had its effect, through the adroitness of the "roper," he is induced to lose when money he may have in his possession.

Not more than two weeks ago a man was thus inveigled into this den, at No. 520 Broadway, and left it, having lost $1,700, which was divided among the gamekeepers and the "roper." This man, on his return, made a personal report to the neighborhood of the hotel is well known, and it has been wondered at that some measures have not been taken by the authorities to suppress their nefarious business.

No. 531, just above the hotel, is a gambling house, kept by Harvey Young, conducted on the same principles as the place described. The men who manage it, and the gang of pickpocket thieves infest the corner and insult respectable passers-by.

In the next block above is No. 565 Broadway, kept by a notorious character named Tom Sidd, who, it is said, is worth his own time worth $150,000. A short time ago a stranger, passing by Sidd's, and slightly under the influence of liquor, was decoyed into this den. One block further up, on the opposite side of the street, is No. 568 Broadway, run by a desperate gambler, called Jim Brown.

The mammoth gambling-house, so often brought to the attention of Superintendent Kosso, kept by "Bill Murray, the bond smasher," at No. 722 Eighth-street, is known to every person in the metropolitan district.

Among the inducements held out at this house is breakfast at 11 A. M. and dinner at 5½ P. M., Murray announcing to the patrons that if they lose their money they shall not want for a "square meal." Keno, faro, roulette, at nour, and all other games in vogue, including American hazard, have countenance for robbing, prosper here. The house runs eighteen hours out of the twenty-four, and is always crowded. Police Sergeants and roundsmen alike visit this place. Sergeants and roundsmen alike visit this place, sitting side by side with blackleg and thieves, occupy responsible positions. Policemen of duty are seen to go in this house so frequently that people in the neighborhood call it a Police rendezvous. Murray, in talking to his visitors, makes a boast that he has things fixed with the Police, and assures them that they need have no fear of molestation. It is not an uncommon occurrence to see Murray or his partner, Craigs, (and at times both,) arm in arm with Capt. Byrne, of the Fifteenth Precinct, on Broadway. Occasionally they may be observed on a fine afternoon driving through the Park, accompanied by John C. Heenan, ex-pugilist and keeper of a gambling-house at No. 761 Broadway. Murray's house is reported to draw from the pockets of its patrons about $25,000 per month, on behalf of which sum that the expenses are paid, Murray says, some to Police. Heenan's strongest inducement held out to young men in business to enter this place is the security offered to them from a "descent" of the Police and the exposure consequent on arrest.

A few doors east of Murray's is No. 714 Eighth-street, which is called Jim Bonner's. The place is known as the "Major's." It is a mammoth establishment, and kept on the same principle as Murray's. The "Major" in a fascinated manner informs his patrons that he has influence with the authorities, and that they can visit his house without fear of its being pulled by the Police. It is said to be true.

If this exposure should be expended into the Eighth Precinct, the number of games catalogued above might be more than doubled, and the list might be lengthened and explained, by a page even in the Bowery, and in other parts of the City.

Burning Scenes on a Fall River Train.

From the Boston Advertiser, Nov. 4.

A short time since Rev. Mr. Murphy, a Catholic priest of Fall River, was suspended from his sacred office for habitual drunkenness, but the warning appears not to have had a proper effect upon him, judging from his reported actions on the Fall River boat train Monday night. He occupied an end side seat of the car, and at a right angle sat a gentleman and his wife. After riding for quite a distance the lady informed her husband that Murphy was acting with impropriety toward her, and Conductor Porter was appealed to, and he warned Murphy to behave himself. For a while the warning appeared to have an effect, but soon after the conductor was complained, when upon his hand ordered Murphy to stop his actions. The half-drunken man paid no attention, but, standing suddenly from his seat, he threw his arms around the lady's neck. Her husband instantly drew a revolver, placed the muzzle at Murphy's head, and fired two shots in quick succession. The pistol missed fire, and the conductor and passengers interfered, but the gentleman struck Murphy a forehand with the butt of the weapon, inflicting a severe wound, and partially stunning Murphy to his senses. The report that a priest had been shot spread throughout the train, and a number of Catholic passengers started for the assailant, with the avowed intention of lynching the man. Conductor Porter, however, locked the stranger in a saloon until the station was reached, when he was quietly got on board.

Opium-Smoking in London.

The Lancet says: "Readers of Edwin Drood will remember the description of the opium-smoker as he is found at the East end. The steady influx of the Chinese into that quarter has multiplied the victims in the vice and the houses in which they are accommodated. These latter are of a very low character, and are mostly kept by Chinese, to whose countrymen opium-smoking represents the intelligent which spirit-drinking does to the British seamen. The drug as it is inhaled is an opaque extract made by first dissolving the crude opium in water, and afterwards, then carefully boiling. Inspection, by the requirements of leaves, sticks, &c., are skimmed off till it has the consistency and appearance of tar. The prepared opium represents about twelve per cent of the crude. It is rendered to be smoked, when it is put in small boxes made of bamboo cane. The smoker lies down, and, about the size of a pea, into the bowl of his pipe, which is of earthenware, and, having lighted it at an adjacent lamp, reclines on his side and inhales it in two or three whiffs, retaining it in his lungs as long as possible. He then rolls over and falls into a state of stupor, or passes to the neighborhood of Bacchic blisters, scenes of Circean and Lucanian, whose sallow, vice-like complexions, blazed eyes, and relaxed lock, indicate the effects of their indulgence. The amount these smokers consume is a matter of some supposition. Many of them are a quarter of an ounce daily; some, it is said, as much as one ounce. They rapidly get decrepit in body and mind, and die in starvation and rags, nobody knows exactly how. For all this, there is greater or the increase in China, and the demand for it in Chinese centres in every quarter of the globe."

THE DONOGHUE MURDER

Investigation in the Case Before Coroner Young.

Evidence of the Eye-Witnesses and Others.

John Scannell Positively Identified as the Murderer.

A Verdict Found Against Him by the Jury.

The investigation of the murder of Thomas Donoghue's was made yesterday at the City Hall, before Coroner Young. The hour for the commencement of the inquiry was set down at 10 o'clock, but from some cause the accused, John Scannell, was not brought from the Police Station in West Thirteenth-street until nearly 11 o'clock. During that interval not few persons assembled in the examination room, and being principally witnesses, were remarkably, if not painfully, quiet. Shortly before 11 o'clock John Scannell was brought into the Coroner's office, handcuffed to Officer Maloney, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, and closely followed by Capts. Burden and McIlwaine, and several police officers. The prisoner on entering the office first met his wife, and having kissed her, was then taken down into the examination room where he was placed in a chair on the left of the Coroner's desk. Upon being seated he was joined by Mr. Spencer, who acted as his counsel, also by his wife, both of whom took seats near him. The police officers stood on a body close by the party.

The prisoner wore a very calm and collected appearance, and maintained the same cool composure during the whole examination, although his face was very pale. Whatever internal agitation he felt, nothing of the kind was apparent on his countenance, and he occasionally conversed with his counsel. His wife, who was rather stoutly attired, smiled several times during the progress of the inquiry, and did not seem to be much affected by the evidence, even when it was of the most positive character. The audience, although after the prisoner's appearance it had increased until no more could get into the room, throughout the proceedings was unusually quiet.

The Coroner opened the proceedings by calling the names of the jurors, after which he addressed them as follows:

On Sunday last, when you viewed the body of the deceased, I explained to you the law prescribing your duties as jurors. I have but little to add to what I then said. You have sworn to render a verdict as to who and in what manner Thomas Donoghue came to his death, and inquire into the circumstances attending the same, and that your verdict shall be based upon the testimony elicited before you. Should you find that more than one person was actually engaged in the murderous attack upon the deceased, or that there was any complicity, aiding or abetting, in the murder, of any individuals conspiring to the assault, I urge you to let no personal, social, or political consideration swerve you from an impartial and fearless discharge of your duty, and to render a verdict accordingly.

The witnesses were then called and gave their testimony.

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD STEPHENSON.

Edward Stephenson, paying teller First National Bank, residing at No. 346 Third-avenue, was the first witness called, and testified as follows: I was acquainted with Thomas Donoghue, the deceased, for nine years; I saw him alive at the corner of Twenty-eighth-street and Broadway on Saturday evening, Nov. 2; I did not go there with him, but was present when he was shot; the first thing I heard was the report of a pistol; Mr. Theodore W. Decker, with whom I was talking, started forward, and exclaimed, "My God, what was that;" a rush was at the same time made for the north-west end of the room; I did feel excited, and therefore did not go with the crowd; I was but a short distance from the man who fired the shots, who was on my left. [Witness then stood and described the positions of himself and Scannell.] I turned round toward my left and saw the shooting; I saw four shots fired; I walked forward and saw the face of the man who did the shooting, and I recognized him as John Scannell.

By the Coroner—Do you see the man? You saw fire the four shots now in the room? A.—Yes, Sir, there he is [pointing to the prisoner]; I did not see the first shot fired; I did not see who the man was that had been shot until after Scannell had left the saloon; I was not positively that Scannell fired the four succeeding shots; after Scannell left I recognized the dead man as Donoghue; I first went into the saloon about eight o'clock in the evening; I saw Scannell on the platform with the man who was selling the pools, and afterward saw him on the floor among the crowd; not expecting any trouble I took no particular notice; I saw Scannell and Donoghue among the crowd about twenty minutes before the shooting took place; I did not speak to either of them; after the shooting was over Scannell ran up the steps alone; some one went up the steps directly after, but I do not know who he was; after that several persons left the saloon by the same steps; there seemed to be a general stampede; that is all I know of the affray.

TESTIMONY OF SHERIDAN BROOK.

Sheridan Brook, residing at the Mason Dorde, testified: I was particularly acquainted with Donoghue; for three or four years; he did not see him alive for about a week or ten days before the shooting; I did not see him on Saturday, Nov. 2, either dead or alive; I only saw a portion of the shooting; I was standing, at the time, at the oyster-counter, near the door, talking to a gentleman; I heard the report of a pistol, and looked in that direction; I then saw a man lying on the floor; I saw Scannell in the doorway, and saw him fire three or four shots at the prostrate body; I know Scannell; I did not hear him say anything; I had relied to Scannell that night, but did not notice anything peculiar about him; I do not know who was in his company, if anybody; I did not see him enter the saloon, and merely shook hands, at the same time passing the usual compliments; after the shots were fired there was such an uproar that nothing distinct could be observed; I next discovered Scannell going up the steps, but did not notice anything in his hands; I know him, if any one; I know nothing more of the matter.

TESTIMONY OF W. J. FINNEGAN.

William J. Finnegan, of No. 206 East Eighteenth-street, testified: I did not know Donoghue; I was present at Johnson's pool-rooms on Saturday evening, Nov. 2; I arrived there between eight and ten minutes past eight o'clock; I only knew Scannell by sight; I did not see him at the saloon; I saw the flash of two shots, but did not see who fired, as I was twenty feet from the door; I only heard the first report, and did not see who fired the shot, or who had fallen; there was a general stampede after the shots was fired; I did not leave the saloon, and did not see Scannell at all; I saw the body after the shooting; as it lay about two feet from the door; I remained until about ten o'clock, and until the body was removed; I know nothing more about the affray.

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD MURPHY.

Richard Murphy, of No. 140 West Twenty-eighth-street, testified: I am intimately acquainted with Donoghue, and met him all with Scannell; I was at Johnson's on Saturday, Nov. 2, at about nine o'clock in the evening; I saw Donoghue after he was shot, but not before; I heard four shots fired, but could not point out who fired them; I was standing by the opposite corner at the time, and saw a man fire one shot from the stairs; he fired deliberately at a body which lay on the floor; he had a large pistol in his hand; I was as positive as I could be that I could not identify the man who fired the pistol. A. large pearl-handled revolver being shown to witness, he said: That is like the pistol used by the man who fired the shots; the man came up the steps, but I did not notice that there was any one with him; I do not know that I ever saw Scannell; the light was shining on his face while he was standing; I saw some one standing beside him; that I could not now tell whether his beard was light or black, or even if he had any; I heard some person say, "My God, John Scannell has shot Tom Donoghue"; I think that was after the last shot had been fired; but I could not say who uttered the words; I went to the Police station with the body; and that is all I know of the matter.

TESTIMONY OF BENJAMIN F. BEADY.

Benjamin F. Beady, of No. 40 South Washington-square, testified: I did not know either Donoghue or Scannell; I was in Johnson's saloon on Saturday, Nov. 2, at a little after nine o'clock in the evening; I had advanced half about, but was the shooting began; it seemed as if it occurred immediately after I entered the saloon; I saw a man and heard a noise on my right hand; I went a few feet further and turned round; when I saw a body lying in the doorway; I saw a man on my right hand firing at the body as it lay in the doorway; and afterward saw the person who did the firing run up the steps; the crowd gave a large and carried me to the back part of the saloon; I afterward got free and saw the body; the man who did the firing had side whiskers, but I do not think I could identify him; he had a large pistol (similar to the one produced); [Ex.] I could swear to, but that is all I know.

TESTIMONY OF FRANKLIN H. HAMILTON.

Franklin H. Hamilton, of No. 128 West Twenty-first-street, testified: I was acquainted with Donoghue, and saw him alive at Johnson's pool-rooms on Saturday evening, Nov. 2; I met him shortly after 9 o'clock; said, "How do you do?" and shook hands; those were the only remarks; I knew Scannell; and also saw him there; Scannell said, "How do you do, Hiram?" calling me by my middle name; we shook hands; Donoghue was about ten feet from Scannell at this time, but I think the pillar hid him from the view of Scannell; I noticed nothing particular with Scannell at the time; almost immediately after the shots were fired; I heard the report; I was standing at the bar; I shook hands with one and went past him and leaned on the end of the bar; when I heard the first shot I raised my head, but the reflectors being in the way I could not see beyond them; Jacob Oliute came toward me, and when I heard two or three shots fired I ducked my head; accidentally; they said they were firing at each other; I told Oliute to drop down behind the counter, so that he would not get shot; he did so, and I dropped down on him; this prevented me from hearing anything further, but I distinctly heard five shots fired; I remained down two or three minutes; I then looked up until the shooting stopped, and the p ron up; I did not see again see Scannell until today.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM W. DRAKE.

William W. Drake, of No. 222 Third-avenue, testified: I was acquainted with Donoghue about two or three years; I saw him when he first opened Johnson's saloon on Saturday evening, Nov. 2; but could not tell the exact time; John Scannell was with him; I also know Scannell; I was standing at the bar, when I heard the first five or six feet of the man who fired the shots, but could not tell who he was; I only know he had a large pistol; the saloon was well lighted and I had known Scannell several years, but in the confusion I could not recognize the man who fired the shots; I was thinking of the difference between the man who fired the shots and myself; after he fired the first shot, he advanced a little, fired two shots, advanced a little further, fired one shot, then went to the stairs, ascended one, turned round and fired again; as I was in line of fire I was confused, and could not swear till he; I the man was dressed, or whether he had a hat or cap; I saw Scannell at the same place a night or two before, but do not recollect Donoghue being there at the time, nor did Scannell say anything about him; I had my eyes on the man who fired the shots, and did not see Scannell; I could not say who he was.

By a JUROR—Will you say it was not Scannell?

WITNESS—I would not; I was so scared that I could not tell; as his face was away from me and when he gave the shots my nerves were so completely shocked, I could not tell.

Thompson W. Decker, of No. 311 East Twenty-seventh-street, and Henry Sauipangh, of No. 244 East Twenty-sixth-street, described what they saw, but could not identify the man who fired the shots.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN F. BARRETT.

John F. Barrett, of No. 39 West Twenty-fourth-street, testified: I am not now in business; I was acquainted with Donoghue about four years; last saw him alive on Saturday evening last, at the New-York Hotel; I also have known Scannell, to know who he was, about eighteen months; I was at Johnson's pool-rooms on Saturday evening, but did not see Donoghue until after the shots were fired; how came to go to Johnson's? A.—I was in the Fifth-avenue Hotel, talking with Gov. Morgan, when I heard that the pools were selling in favor of O'Brien and went up to see if it was true; as I entered the saloon I saw Scannell leaning on his left arm upon the oyster-counter; I then went out to the door, and stood on the stoop, when I returning in about twenty minutes or half an hour; about three minutes after I re-entered the saloon; I saw the firing; I saw the fine face of the man who held the pistol, and saw him deliberately fire one shot after the other with the same regularity that a clock would strike; I was sitting at the table with Mr. Van Tassel at the time; I clearly recognized John Scannell; he wore a soft felt hat and had on a light-colored overcoat; the shots were fired deliberately, but rapidly; I saw his side face during the whole time of the firing of the four shots, and when he turned I could see his full face distinctly; the crowd surged and threw me against the counter; I said aloud, "My God, John Scannell has shot Tom Donoghue;" the last I saw of Scannell, he was in the door; I did not see him going out; I did not see, when I first saw him, have any conversation with him, and did not notice anything particular in his manner; he did not seem to see as if waiting for any person; after Scannell left it went over and took Donoghue's hand; but he was dead; I think the first shot killed him instantly.

In answer to juror, witness said: I saw the side face of the man who held the pistol, all the time at the firing, and saw his full face when he turned round; I could not possibly be mistaken in Scannell, the prisoner, being the man, as the good light I had upon his face; have not the slightest doubt in the matter.

OTHER TESTIMONY.

Michael Farns, of No. 221 Third-avenue, testified that he was acquainted with Donoghue and had been in his company earlier in the evening; he heard the firing, but, being in the centre of the room, did not see anything of it; during the previous meeting, nothing was said about Donoghue.

Capt. John McIlwaine, of the Twentieth Precinct, described his whereabouts and capture of Scannell, and Officer Martin Maloney, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, described how he came to search for and find the pistol under the stoop of No. 220 Fifth-avenue. Dr. Marsh also described the particulars of the post-mortem examination, after which the Coroner said he had no more witnesses to call, but, their evidence being similar to what had been given, he thought it unnecessary to call them, and requested them to retire and consider their verdict.

After an absence of twenty minutes, the jury returned, and Mr. Lewis Cass read the following as the unanimous verdict of the jury:

THE VERDICT.

"We, the undersigned jurors, called together by Coroner Nelson W. Young to ascertain the cause of the death of Thomas Donoghue, found at Johnson's pool-room, on Saturday, Nov. 2, 1872, about 9 o'clock P. M., that John Scannell fired four or five shots deliberately into the body of Donoghue, causing his instantaneous death. Two jury are of the opinion that the shots were intended to cause the death."

The above was signed by all of the ten jurors.

Coroner Young then committed the prisoner to the Tombs, first taking his answers to the usual questions, when he said his name was John J. Scannell, aged thirty-two; native of the United States; occupation, gambler; residence, East Twenty-fourth-street; and without occupation at present. His counsel, in answer to the question if the prisoner had anything to say in his defense, said: "The defendant has a defense which he will present before the proper tribunal," and added a request that the Coroner continue the impartial manner in which he had conducted the investigation.

The prisoner was then removed to the Tombs, to await the action of the Grand Jury.

The National Paper Money—Lecture by Wallace P. Groom Before the Liberal Club.

At the New-York Liberal Club, last evening, Mr. Wallace P. Groom delivered a lecture upon "National Paper Money." In the legal-tender notes—though they are imperfect, not being a full legal-tender, lacking also the very important element of reciprocal convertion with Government bonds—Americans have, the lecturer claimed, the best currency any nation on the face of the globe has ever known. Notwithstanding this fact, there are tens of thousands, and among them honest and intelligent men, who are endeavoring to turn the wheels of progress, backward; clamoring, as they do, for a return to specie payments. After careful observation Mr. Groom averred he was bound to come to the conclusion that in the inexhaustibility (at the option of the holder) of national paper money with Government bonds bearing a fixed rate of interest, there is a sound principle that will regulate the movements of finance and commerce as accurately as the motion of the steam-engine is regulated by the governor. Such paper money otherwise than gold and silver have been or ever can be. The use of gold, or other merchandise, as money, is a barbarism unworthy of the age. Said Bat: "Gold is an article of merchandise, and its market value cannot be made uniform. Law Congress assuming to fix an arbitrary authority, it will still lack the power to fix the value thereof, as the Constitution requires it shall do with money. In Wall-street parlance, gold can be corned; much more readily than stocks, bonds, wheat, corn, pork, or any other articles of which nothing is taken for future delivery dealt in. Of this fact we have abundant and costly evidence; and it will be again proved, and that to our sorrow, if gold should unfortunately be re-adopted as the only legal-

AMERICAN POTTERIES.

Proficiency of the Ancients in the Manufacture of Ceramic-ware.

Modern Taste in the Matter—Work in Terra Cotta—Stone-ware—The Principal Factories in the United States.

The working of clay into various forms of domestic use carries the historian back into ages so remote as to be absolutely wrapped in the completest darkness. Among the extraordinary deposits at the bottom of the pile dwellings known as palafittes or lacustrines, fragments of pottery have always been present. Sometimes whole vases have been found filled with a carbonized substance, which chemical analysis showed to be of a cereal nature. In those mounds of stone or cairns, which the piety of former races raised over the remains of their chiefs and their priests, coarse vases of unbaked, unglazed pottery were invariably discovered. Nay, more; fragments of earthenware, baked, have been found in the silt of the Nile, at such a depth and under such circumstances as to prove that more than 10,000 years have rolled away since the waves of the great river in its annual inundation had gently deposited them in the place where they were obtained. To endeavor by reasoning to ascertain what period of time must have elapsed before man conceived the idea of making clay receptacles to hold his surplus food, would be a speculation more ingenious than useful. It is, however, necessary to point out that man has known how to do so for a period so vast as to materially alter our views on chronology. Neither is this the place to examine into the exact meaning of the word chaos, on which our present chronology rests. It will be sufficient to remember that baked pottery has a proved existence of upward of ten thousand years. From the Egyptians the art of manipulating clay traveled to the Greeks, among whom the peoples of Athens, Corinth, and of Sicyon had the greatest reputation for skill in this manufacture. In Athens it was so considerable a business that the potters had a distinct quarter of the city called Keramikes, from which we obtain the word ceramic or keramic, according to the pursuits of the South Kensington Museum, established by the late Prince Albert, one of the greatest authorities on the subject, of modern times. A thorough study of Greek history will reveal the fact that the superiority of Athenian pottery did not spring from the supreme character of Attic art, from the genius of her sculptors, her architects, and painters. On the contrary, all these things came from the potters' field, which was the nursery, and indeed the germ of Attic taste. And so the Athenians themselves believed, and, therefore, inscribed among their most illustrious citizens those potters who had attained to singular excellence. From the Greeks the ceramic art is supposed to have traveled to the Romans, though it is a moot point whether it was not indigenous in Italy. But it is certain that wherever the Romans carried their arms, they carried their arts too, and the line that marks the extent of their conquests is also the line that marks the points beyond which remains of Roman pottery cannot be found. Our ancestors, the ancient Britons, under the Roman teaching, made the most creditable advances in ceramic ware, and manufactured tiles and vases in such quantities that it is almost impossible to dig for a foundation in certain English cities without coming upon tesselated pavements and antique pottery. Under the Saxons the art, thought it did not actually perish, became of an inferior character; nor can it be fairly said to have revived in Britain until within the last century. England now stands at the very head of civilization in this particular, and foreigners come to her potteries to study her processes, and to her museums to study her patterns.

This introduction has been thought necessary because of certain canting axioms which are lies, and which deserve to be so treated. There are writers of eminence who have not scrupled to lay down the general law that in the Frenchman and the Italian there is an inborn taste, an intuitive appreciation of beauty, a national artistic faculty, altogether wanting in the stolid Englishman and his cousin, the American. The world has taken these baseless assertions as self-evident truths, and even patriotic men have not blushed to repeat them as such. Yet they are intrinsically foolish lies. There is in the depths of the English heart an artistic appreciation second to none other, and which has been so fully aroused within the past twenty years that no one can deny it. No Frenchman, no Italian, however biased, will deny the ascendancy of Pinkington in gold and silver ware, or of Minton and Wedgwood in majolica. The German is far more stolid than the Englishman, infinitely more so than the American, yet his artistic capacity has never been questioned. It may be asserted that if the same exertions are made here in America to develop that artistic capacity which we have inherited from our English forefathers, and which now lies dormant, smothered by fierce speculations, we shall create a school which will become the wonder of the world. It is not in vain that we possess a country whose mountains and whose rivers instil poetry into each unconscious heart. It is not in vain that we possess those wonderful skies whose colors have taught our women those brilliant toilettes which foreigners, after much sneering, have learned to admire. It is not in vain that we breathe for the greater part of the year an air as pellucid as the far-famed atmosphere of Athens. Line, and color, and poetry are being taught us without our knowledge, and the essentials of the highest art are being moulded in our clay without our recognition. But though these things are so, though an infinite Providence has surrounded us with all the conditions necessary for artistic excellence, and though we possess within ourselves that faculty of art without which all external conditions would be valueless, yet we cannot jump to the first rank at a bound. We must commence at the beginning, at the A B C of the thing. The dexterity of hand, the education of the eye, and the full development of the artistic spirit must be inherited from generation to generation before anything really great or meritorious can be accomplished. This is the foundation. For the want of this our good things are isolated facts, our architecture is idealess, our pictures mere talented sketches. The only way to obtain this foundation of art is through the manufacture of ceramic wares.

When we come to consider what we have attempted in this particular there is not much cause for exultation. Our factories are few and far between, and the only place where a genuine activity has been developed is in the town of Trenton, in New-Jersey, where porcelain terra-cotta patterns, there are no less than thirteen manufactories of terra cotta. This amazing activity must be explained by the splendid clay beds which abound throughout the State. Yes, in New-York there must be argillaceous wealth in many directions, and especially in the region of the Adirondacks, where, indeed, at Fort Edward, a little industry of this kind has been started. But at the present moment the few terra-cotta factories in New-York City and Williamsburg are dependent for their clay upon New-Jersey, and consequently are at a disadvantage compared with those establishments where the clay and the kilns are side by side. The writer, in his endeavor to place before the public a sketch of the condition of ceramic art in this country, visited the establishments in this City. On the reason that, though they are, as regards raw material, not so favorably situated as other places, yet this very infelicity has stimulated them to compensate because the weakness by exceptional greater care and greater ingenuity. The result has been that their wares are generally not a few steps ahead of the best of their competitors. It is not superior. He accordingly visited the Manhattan Drain-pipe and Terra-Cotta Works of Stewart & Co., in Eighteenth-street and Eleventh-avenue, and the stone-ware factory of James Carr, on Thirteenth-street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues. In both wares include porcelain, and porcelain of manufacture in this country. But it was a subject too extensive and so exclusively interesting to necessitate a special article. The Greenpoint factory, therefore, though visited at the same time, was mentioned on a former occasion.

TERRA COTTA.

This name comprehends all the rudest forms fabricated in clay, as well as those artistic reproductions of Greek and Etruscan pottery for which the French and Germans have a deserved reputation. It is an unfortunate fact that no attempt of the kind has been made in this country which has produced very creditable statues. The chief things manufactured by Mr. Stewart are mean-present drain-pipes of very excellent quality, and ornamental chimney-pots, which compare very favorably with those of foreign make. The clay used is the blue clay of Perth Amboy, which is singularly excellent, and is found in large quantities. In fact, for many miles around, the country is one vast bed of this clay, in consequence of which numerous factories similar to Mr. Stewart's have sprung up in the vicinity, especially about Woodbridge. The clay immediately about Woodbridge, on the estate of Marcus Spence, Esq., at Eagleswood, it is of a quality specially adapted for artistic purposes and for those renderings of statuary which are so much admired at the present time. The Woodbridge clay is peculiarly fitted for drain-pipes, and for all articles which have to endure great compression. It is this kind which is used in Stewart's pottery, being brought by schooners from the little creek at Woodbridge. On its arrival, it is dumped with water and worked with a shovel. It is then sent into a pug mill and ground. After this, if it is to be used for drain-pipes, it is put into a screw press which has a die inside, that fashions it of the correct diameter and cuts it off at the required length. Men are ready to receive it as it strikes forth from the bottom of the pipe, and clap each immature pipe into a wooden covering called a drum, from which about half the length protrudes. The drum is then placed upon the potter's wheel, which is moved by a foot treadle, called a jigger, and the potter rapidly doubles back the top of the pipe, to produce the collar, which is required to be of great strength. It is, of course, possible to make this collar in the screw-press, by means of a die; but experience has proved that drain-pipes so made are weakest in the very part which calls for the greatest strength, and, therefore, the best manufacturers have gone back to the old potter's wheel. As a good potter can collar 1,200 pipes of six inches diameter, in a day, the loss is not very great. From the wheel the pipes are taken, by an elevator, to the drying-room, where they remain until in a condition to receive the glazing. This is done by dipping them in a tub containing the slip, as it is technically called, which is a compound of some earth found near Albany. They are now ready for the kilns. Of these Mr. Stewart's pottery boasts two, each eight feet in diameter. The chimney-pots are molded in plaster of paris molds, with all kinds of patterns, according to the prevailing taste or the orders of the architect. The body is not exactly the same, for something is added by each manufacturer, according to his experience, which is one of the trade secrets. It is probable to conjecture that in some instances this takes the form of silicious sand. The great art, however, is in the manner in which the clay is worked up. It has to be thrown on a board with violence, cut with a wire and rethrown, the object being to expel bubbles of air which may be in the interior of the mass. The more delicate the fabric the more essential is this expulsion. Keeping the clay for a considerable time has the same effect, for the imprisoned air, gases, humic acid, traces of vegetable decomposition, &c., which are to be found in clay will in some work themselves off. For works of art in terra cotta, Brongniart, a former director of the works at Sevres, where he ruled for fifty years, declared eight months necessary. For his chimney-pots, Mr. Stewart allows a month, which, considering the comparative roughness of the article, is very fair. When the clay is pronounced ready, it is squeezed into four two molds, which are fastened together with a strap, and the mold being unbound displays the chimney-pot ready for the drying-room, with the designs clearly cut. There is no glazing used, and the article passes from the drying-room straight to the kiln. When baked, the surface will betray whether there was any air or gas inside the clay, for wherever there was a bubble there will be a slight irregularity, and if the pot is broken the fracture will show here and there small fissures like those in bread, but infinitely more minute. A specialty of this factory is the garden-ornament business in rustic work—that is, in imitation of bark. Seats are made in imitation of the stump of a tree, and urns in imitation of hollow logs, the supports being of the same style. Mr. Stewart also manufactures fountains, boys with dolphins, &c., statuary, and vases for plants, of which the critic must say that the designs and moldings are in every instance admirable, but the clay is infinitely too coarse and uneven. As soon as delicate forms and graceful lines are brought into comparison with a material, hardly, if at all, finer than that of which the drain-pipes are made, the eye is instinctively revolted, and the proverb of a silk purse and a sow's ear comes of itself before the mind. The manufacturer of terra cotta must learn either to produce a more homogeneous, even, and finer-grained body, or he must assimilate his patterns to his material, and create a type of rude beauty. The delicate bass-reliefs must be exchanged for rugged, bold designs in middle or even high relief. Then shall the success of fitness be completed, and a new type created not without its own recommendation.

Before quitting this branch of the subject, it is but just to mention that a factory at Fort Edward, in this State, produces very excellent jugs and mugs of earthenware; that for terra cotta articles and drain-pipes, Mr. Blanc, of Philadelphia; the nephews of Edward H. Quinn, of Williamsburg; a Mr. Taylor, of Chicago; Messrs. Bowman & Co., of Trenton; Hall, of Perth Amboy, and several new firms at Woodbridge have obtained high commendation. These names include all the well-known manufactures of the country. It is not to be doubted but that there are many others who supply home wants in various States, but they do not compete in any way for general trade, and their names are not quoted out of their own territory. It must be noted that the only firm attempting artistic work, statuettes, brackets, &c., is Harrison, of Philadelphia.

STONE-WARE.

It is in this branch of ceramic art that England specially excels. The essential nature of stone-ware is a soft opaque body, enveloped in a hard enamel or glaze. Under this head, therefore, come all the varied kinds of faience made in the Middle ages, in vain efforts to solve the secret of that beautiful ware which the Portuguese in 1508 brought from China, and called porcelanna, though its name among the Celestials was tse-te. Faience derived its name from the French, who called all the beautiful glazed earthenware by that name, because it was first imported from Faenza, a town of Italy. The Italians called it majolica, because they acquired the art of making it from the island of Majorca. The islanders had learned the secret from Spaniards who had been taught it by the Sarracenic Moors, who had great tile factories of this ware in Granada and Cordova. The Moors had acquired the art of enameling earthenware in Persia, and the Persians had invented it in their strenuous efforts to find out the secret of the Chinese and Japanese transparent ware. In France, in the reign of Henri Deux, as early as the year 1548, the faience was made in great perfection by one Oliver Pantelet, as is supposed. In England nothing was done good, bad, or indifferent at that epoch, nor is there any trace of faience or majolica fabrics there until the reign of Charles II., in the year 1671, when a gentleman named John Dwight, lineal ancestor of Timothy W. Dwight, the honored President of the Columbia Law School, of this City, established works in Fulham, in the County of Middlesex, for the manufacture "of white sorges, marbled porcellane vessels, statues and figures, and fine stone sorges and vessels; also, porcellane red and dark-colored porcellane or China and Persian wares and Cologne or stone-wares." This is a quotation from the patents granted to him by the King in the years 1671 and 1684. In the Museum at South Kensington, as far as the writer has been able to ascertain, there are no exemplars of this very early English stone-ware. Even if there were it is a fact that the industry died with the daring man who was in that early age the prototype of Josiah Wedgwood and of the Brownlows. It is clear from the wording of the patent that he had discovered the great secret of the Chinese pet-un-tse, or feldspar-clay, but he had not mastered the mystery of the kao-lin—the peculiar clay without which porcelain cannot be made commercially. Nor did the industry commence in England in real earnest until the time of Josiah Wedgwood, who produced a new type of faience or stone-ware far more beautiful than anything the world had yet witnessed, although of course it is not to be, and cannot be, compared with the true porcelain. From his time the manufacture of stone-ware in England has gone on increasing and decreasing until at the present time it is the best in the world and the cheapest. Whether for pattern or for ornament, for durability or for color, English stone-ware, including majolica, has no equal. In America, the attempt to produce faience dates from no date very far back. In fact Mr. James Carr, an emigrant from the potteries in Staffordshire, England, was the pioneer in 1852 in the town of South Amboy. He was burned out there, and came to New-York. In time he started, in conjunction with a Mr. Morgan, the present business in Thirteenth-street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues. They had two small kilns, and employed thirty hands. At present there are five large kilns and ninety hands. Mr. Carr being the sole proprietor. He adores his business with a devotedness never seen out of ceramic wares, but not unbecoming in it, for it has a fascination for those who follow it which is as strong as any experienced by a chemist, a mathematician, or any follower of the sciences. In his factory almost everything in the way of stone-ware proper is manufactured—everything, that is, of Keolin clay from Pennsylvania, powdered flint and feldspar, these being added to enable the mine clay to resist the high temperature which is necessary to fuse the external coat or glaze. It is again sifted through a lawn-sieve, and is then taken to the slip kiln, where it is dried and powered to the extent of a mass of combined plasticity and velocity necessary for the potter's wheel, or, as it is professionally termed, the thrower's wheel. Here a man makes jars, or whatever kind of goods may have been ordered, his boy throwing to him balls of the clay from large enough to be fashioned into a jar. As fast as he completes them they are removed in trays and taken to be dried. They are then taken to the smoothing-lathe and smoothed. They are then baked for the first time in the kiln, being packed in slipper fire-clay vessels, called saggars. As the ware would adhere if they touched anything, they are mounted on stilts, tiny tripods with short legs, which hold them by points, the place of contact being inevitably marked on the article, but erased afterward by a file. After the first baking they are removed to the glazing room to receive the external glaze. The principle is easy to comprehend. The jar in its biscuit condition is porous. The glaze, made of powdered feldspar, with a little lime to make it fuse rapidly, and several other chemical reagents, is mixed with water in great tubs. The glazer takes the jar, dips it into the slip, as it is technically called, and puts it to drain on a board pierced with holes, called a fiddle, stretched across the slip-tub. The jar, being porous, absorbs all the water of the solution, and the glaze is left on the outside. It is now baked for the second time and comes out finished stone-ware. If it has to be decorated, which is very seldom the case, for almost all people prefer the plain ware, in consequence of the poor style of decoration practiced in America, it is painted by hand. The English have the only people who engrave their ware by means of prepared paper. For vessels that are not made on the throwing wheel, there are the processes of the jugger, moved by a boy turning a crank, and there is steam-power. Jugs, and all vessels which have a handle, are made to be molded in a plaster of paris mold. Before the paste is put in, however, it has to be severely wedged to get out any bubbles of air. This result is arrived at by the battering-board, made of plaster, as is the batterer, which resembles a primeval club, with a wooden handle. The clay handle to suit himself. He takes a sufficiency of paste with both hands, throws it on the batter-board with considerable force, then, with an adroit blow from the batterer, spreads it out flat, pretty much as pastry cooks do with a rolling-pin. In a minute or two and less time the workman gets rid of the air by making a hole in the centre. The batter-boards have to be kept constantly damp, otherwise the potter would not be able to get the clay off the plaster, or, in the technical language of the profession, the board would not deaven.

The clay used in this manufacture comes from the vicinity of Perth Amboy. It is not, therefore, to be wondered at that there are thirteen factories of stone-ware in Trenton. There is also a factory near Syracuse, in New-York State, known as the Geddes Pottery Company, and, though it is at a great distance, the writer has been able to glean information, yet this demand for the clay has brought it up from $3 50 per ton, which was the price in 1856, to $6. This branch of industry seems to be a thriving one, and the articles manufactured are of excellent quality. The decoration, however, there is a notorious weakness, where one sees the finely-decorated English ware to sell to great advantage. Still the commercial conditions for this business are so greatly in favor of the New-Yorkers and the New-Jerseymen that, in the common domestic table articles of plain C. C., the English ware will scarcely be driven to the wall. The strides which are being made in this particular in the two States indicated are very great; but the demand is so much greater than the supply that the English stone-ware has at present almost absolute control of the Western and Southern markets. Still there is an adaptable prosperity about it, and the one thing needed is being supplied by the Cooper Institute Schools of Design.

ERICH'S TEMPLE OF FASHION.

Fall Opening and Grand Display of Goods—A Rich Assortment of Valuable Articles at Moderate Prices.

The old buildings that did good service for fifteen years as Ehrich's Temple of Fashion, on Eighth-avenue, having been torn down some time since, are now replaced by a commodious structure three stories in height, and 100 feet in length by 50 feet in breadth. In addition to the three handsome show windows in the front, there is a large dome in the centre of the store, completely roofed over with glass, which, besides affording the best light to all parts of the store, serves admirably as a medium for the display of goods. During the three opening days of the week this space was festooned with flags, handsome shawls, rich works and fine furs, carriage robes; flags of every color were also displayed on the front of the buildings, and tastefully draped the broad staircase that leads to the spacious show-rooms above. On the right of the entrance was an assortment of choice laces, including point applique, round point, valenciennes, real thread and guipure in every width and pattern of the latest designs, from a narrow edge to a deep flounce, from a tiny collar to an exquisite cover for the parasol, handkerchiefs, sleeves and dainty capes. Embroidered sets, bands and edges were tastefully commingled amid the almost endless assortment of passementeries, gimps, fringes and hand-crocheted ornaments that glistened in their profusion of sparkling jets, and gave a rich effect to this entire department. As the opening took place so late in the season, many of the patterns in gimps and guipure laces are entirely new, the firm having made a specialty of those goods, and importing them directly from the manufacturers. Next follows merino underwear and hosiery, in every quality and size, for ladies, gentlemen, youth, and children, while opposite are the sealyx worsteds and canvas, of all new and tasteful patterns, work-boxes, toilet articles, perfumery, &c. On the left of the main entrance the array of ribbons is really dazzling; broad Roman stripes, gay plaids, bright self colors, neutral tints, in gros grain moire and taffetas; cases of delicate flowers, branches and assorted on the premises. Ribbons of every brilliant effect, silk pompoons, bright wings, nodding willow plumes, and airy tips of every hue. The stock of hats, consisting of gray, white, black, and brown silk plush for children, and all the new shades of French and English felt for ladies and school-girls can be seen. The firm have made a thirty-seven cent nap to $1 25. Cloaking velvets are also displayed on the floor at remarkably low prices, as well as trimming velvets and turquoise silks to match any feather, flower or ribbon. Gloves in all the latest styles, viz with the gravats or Prince Imperial quadrangular fronts are looped and knotted in the most graceful and inextricable manner. Some of the newest ties are of solid grounds in rose, blue or black and brocaded with white, giving the effect of a silvery haze. The second floor is devoted to furs, cloaks, shawls, millinery, infant's trousseaux, and ladies' underclothing, including silk muslin. The leading feature is the combination muff, which with the tiny bow, sells at $1 75, with all intermediate grades, up to seal-skin sacques, at $175, and handsome bands of fur sold by the yard for trimming. Good cloth cloaks and velvets, trimmed with fur, ranging from $15 may be had from $25 up, to real camel's hair of the most perfect finish. The bonnets and round hats occupy a greater space than any other article on this floor, and are as diverse in color and make up as the individual tastes of scores of purchasers could desire. The infants' trousseaux are neatly made; elegantly-trimmed merino cloaks and bonnets being a specialty for the babies; while the ladies are invited to select for their own wear from a well made stock that comprises all the essentials of a complete outfit. The grand exhibition continued for three days, but an inexhaustible amount of choice goods yet remain at the Temple of Fashion, Nos. 297 and 299 Eighth-avenue.

Valuable Gift to the Baltimore Hebrew Orphan Asylum.

From the Baltimore Sun., Nov. 5.

Mr. Wm. S. Rayner and wife have just given a large and valuable property to the Hebrew Orphan Asylum Association of Baltimore, to be used for the purposes of that charity. The property, it is learned, comprises the main building of the old Baltimore County Almshouse, recently purchased by Mr. Rayner, situated near the Franklin road, west of the city, seventy-five feet front, four stories high, containing eighteen rooms and halls. The lot is large enough for a garden and extension of the building in the future, should enlargement ever become necessary. The total value of the property, it is estimated, is $30,000, given to the Orphan Asylum Association in fee, but condition being that the property shall forever be maintained and used as a Hebrew orphan asylum. The building has been repaired, repainted, and put in condition to be occupied at any moment, at a cost of $2,000, which was paid also by Mr. Rayner. The formal transfer of the property will be made at once, and the property accepted by the association, which, it is learned, has a fund of about $7,000 already contributed to the charity.

HOUSE OF REFUGE.

The Home for Vagrant Children on Randall's Island.

The System on which the Institution is Conducted—Discipline in the Establishment—Statistics and Facts.

In the year 1732 the Philanthropic Society of London gave birth to the idea of establishing a reformatory for juveniles, but still unconfirmed, criminals. The Society began its operations by hiring three or four cottages in what was then the suburban village of Hackney, (now a densely populated district of the Metropolis,) and distributing the children whom they took under their care into little families of twelve in each cottage. Their superintendents were a gardener, a tailor, and a shoe-maker. In this humble beginning we trace the origin of the Rauhe Haus in Hamburg, the Institution at Mettray in France, the Farm School at Red Hill in England, and the Houses of Refuge in Rochester and on Randall's Island in New-York. In fact these "three or four cottages" at Hackney formed the nucleus of the organization which, having sojourned for many years in St. George's Fields, seems to have permanently settled at Red Hill, in Surrey. The institution of M. de Metz at Mettray, so far differed in that it was carried on on the military principle, so apparently inseparable from all French organizations.

Could any society have proposed to itself a nobler purpose? The rapid increase of metropolitan population adds every year an alarming increase to the number of vagrant children. A considerable portion of this increase, born in the obscure haunts of crime and debauchery and reared under that most deteriorating process, the life of the gutter, must inevitably become thieves and prostitutes at an unusually early age. It is estimated that there are between 20,000 and 30,000 children in New-York City born amid just such surroundings and brought up under just such evil influences; the parents of many being, one or both, in the State prisons, the parents of some having died or altogether deserted them, and left them, while mere infants, to shift for themselves. If it be true that all men will commit crime when sufficiently tempted, what can be expected of children, who know no such thing as resistance to temptation? It is, then, for such a class, so deserving of our sympathies and all our tuition and all our reformatory efforts, that the House of Refuge, on Randall's Island, was inaugurated. Unfortunately, however, the Board of Managers have not the necessary power, or if they have it they do not exercise it, to confine its benefits to that particular class. Hence the troubles which have lately come upon them. But I will go more at length into this question in another part of this letter.

I do not fancy that it is generally known that the House of Refuge on Randall's Island is essentially a State institution. People are apt to mix it up with the numerous Municipal institutions which surround it on the islands lying between Yorkville and Harlem and the shore of Long Island. Under the existing State laws vagrants, disorderly and criminal boys under sixteen years of age may be sent to the New-York Refuge by the committing Magistrates from the First, Second, and Third Judicial Districts, including the City and County of New-York, and the counties of Richmond, Suffolk, Queens, Kings, Westchester, Orange, Rockland, Putnam, Dutchess, Columbia, Sullivan, Ulster, Greene, Albany, Schoharie, and Rensselaer. From the other counties the boys are all committed to the Western House of Refuge at Rochester. The Western Refuge, however, has no department for girls; consequently all the counties in the State, under the same laws, send girls to the New-York Refuge. For some reason, however, the county Justices do not appear to exercise their right to send girls so freely as might be expected. The girls' branch of the Refuge is not half full, and yet, one would suppose that the Fourth and Sixth Wards of New-York City would alone fill it. There have been as many as 200 girls in the Refuge at one time. Now there are only 112. The mischief of this is that 100 more might be supported for a trifling cost per head; the buildings and officers, the staff of guards, school-teachers, and shop instructors being ample for more than double the present number of inmates.

Randall's Island, on which the House of Refuge is located, lies on the easterly side of the Harlem River, with a boat ferry across to One Hundred and Seventeenth-street. The Refuge is built of old brick, in the Italian style; the two principal structures fronting the river and having a façade nearly one thousand feet in length. The larger of the two buildings, which has a dome at either end, is the boys', the smaller one the girls' department. A division wall, twenty feet high, separates the grounds of the boys' department from that of the girls. Within these grounds, in the rear of the main buildings, are the school-rooms, dining-halls, kitchen and bakery; also the workshops, sewing-rooms, &c. Each department is subdivided, the divisions being also separated by high brick walls, and having a different set of guards, teachers and instructors. These divisions denote whether a boy was committed for a light or heavy offense. Each division again has four grades.

Grade 1 includes the best behaved and most orderly boys and girls; those who do not lie nor use profane language; who are neat and tidy in their persons and cleanly in their habits; who do not willfully or carelessly waste, injure or destroy property belonging to the House, and who are always respectful to the officers.

Grade 2 embraces those who are fair in conduct, but not entirely free from the faults mentioned above.

Grade 3 consists of those whose conduct is not so good as those in Grade 2. The first grade of a boy is alway 8.

Grade 4 is the lowest, and one of disgrace; it is only given in cases of continued or gross misconduct. A former inmate, returned for fault, is placed in Grade 4.

The boys and girls are lowered one grade for violation of the rules, and are raised for good conduct. Any boy or girl continuing for thirteen weeks in the first grade is advanced to the Class of Honor, and wears an appropriate badge. A new-comer may raise himself from the third to the second grade in one week, but he must remain a month in the second grade. When a boy or girl has remained in the first grade for fifty-two successive weeks, and has reached the highest class in school, they gain their release from the Refuge; otherwise, the managers can keep them till they are twenty-one years of age.

The system of indenturing well-behaved boys and girls out to farmers or different trades is followed by the managers on a plan very similar to that of the Children's Aid Society. Of course, it often happens that the child is returned as badly behaved; but in a great many cases the children do well, and eventually attain very respectable positions in life.

One very desirable element for inducing the boys to do well was introduced into the Refuge about eighteen months ago; at the same time it furnishes the boys with material and on going back to the world. A separate shop was set apart for instructing some of the boys in the making of goods of fine quality, requiring greater skill and better workmanship than in the ordinary shops, and after the lapse of a necessary period of instruction, the boys to receive a certain sum weekly as wages from the contractors. The number of boys to be allowed to work in this shop at one time is limited to fifty. This is a system of emulation extent among all the well-intentioned boys, which is not only beneficial to themselves, but furnishes an excellent example to the others.

The requisite qualifications for a boy to enter this shop are, first, a good grade of conduct; second, advancement in the school to, at least, the third class; third, a service in the shop of at least nine months; fourth, an average for [illegible] weeks, and finally [illegible] in the Institution, to the amount of $6 per week; third, for the next three months an advance of $8 per week on the previous wages. Work damaged by a boy through carelessness or neglect, after the first three months, is to be paid for from his earnings to an amount not to exceed one-half of the actual damage. After six months' service in this department the boys may have a separate table in the dining-room, and may draw not to exceed one quarter of their week's pay, either for the purpose of furnishing themselves additional food, clothing, books, or for other proper articles calculated to promote their comfort and improvement, or they may use it to aid needy friends, as they may desire. They may also have a reading-room set apart for their use, furnished with books, papers, and proper games, and the privilege of remaining up one hour after the other boys have retired. During the last six months those boys who have reached the fourth class may have, in addition to their other studies, instruction in bookkeeping, English grammar, and history. For gross violations of the rules of the house, such as using profane or indecent language, fighting, malicious mischief, insubordination to officers or instructors in the school or shop, or for unbecoming manners, the penalty shall be, during the first three months, for the first offense, the loss of grade; for the second, dismissal from the department. During the next six months the penalty shall be, for the first offense, the forfeiture of one-half the week's pay; for the second, dismissal from the department and a forfeiture of all earnings accruing to the boy's credit. On the completion of the nine months each boy will receive an honorable discharge, a certificate of character while in the House, and the balance of earnings standing to his credit. Good workmen graduating from this department will have an opportunity, if they desire it, to be employed in the shops as foremen or instructors, at regular wages. Any account to depend between each boy and the contractor, and pass-books, which are written up every week, are furnished to the boys, that they may know the amount standing to their credit. One hundred and seven boys entered the shop during the year 1871; but twenty-one were unable to retain their positions, and were sent back again to the ordinary workshops. Thirty-two of the lads were honorably discharged with certificates of character. Their earnings, in excess of the contract prices, due to them and paid to them by the contractor, amounted to $3,000 [illegible], an average of $127 10 to each boy. This was a sum amply sufficient to keep them while seeking for work, furnish them with tools, and provide them with a good supply of clothing. The Superintendent of the Refuge says that most of these boys obtained work within a few days of receiving their discharge, and that, with the exception of five, all are conducting themselves well and earning good steady wages. Some of them have visited the Refuge for the purpose of informing the Superintendent of their success in their new stars in life. On leaving the Refuge they all signed the following pledge:

"We, whose names are found below, members of the class under the Plan of Work for Deserving Boys in the New-York House of Refuge, now about to leave the Institution, never expecting again to meet as a class, but each in his own way to enter upon the duties of life and to make his own fortune, hereby pledge to each other and to the managers and officers of this institution that in all our further relations we will, God helping us, live honest and useful lives; that we will never, by word or deed, by practice that will degrade or stain our characters or bring a reproach upon the the institution; and especially do we pledge ourselves never to use or countenance the use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage."

In the general workshops the principal work carried on is boot-making, though many of the smaller boys are employed in the manufacture of ladies' hoops-skirt. Others, again, are occupied in making wire cloth for sieves, brass wire cloth for paper-making machines, rat-traps, gridirons, and flower-baskets. About 2,500 pairs of boots and shoes are turned out daily from the workshops. The girls are employed in making and repairing their own clothing and that of the boys. They, too, do all the washing of the entire establishment, and also make a large number of hoop-skirts. Though the number of girls in the Refuge did not average more than 110 throughout the year, the following abstract of the work done by them for the year 1871 shows that they were by no means allowed to sit with their hands in their laps. On the contrary, they must have been kept remarkably busy:

Dresses	481	Napkins	60
Aprons	497	Drawers for girls	212
Chemises	1,000	Drawers for men	182
Skirts	238	Handkerchiefs	48
Shirts	3,120	Rollers	110
Shirts, flannel	1,423	Boys' pantaloons	1,400
Sheets	1,000	Boys' vests	1,325
Pillow-cases	158	Boys' caps	1,140
Towels	201	Boys' mittens	8
Bed-ticks	230	Boys' suspenders	4
Mattresses	120	Garments repaired	69,801
Spreads	20	Stockings mended	16,752
Comfortables	42	Pieces washed	191,409
Table-cloths	4

On the 1st of January, 1871, there were 386 boys and 90 girls in the Refuge; on the 1st of January, 1872, there were 748 boys and 120 girls. The total earnings of these children for the year amounted to $46,353 27, an average of $63 73 each. These earnings reduced the expenses of the Refuge fifty per cent, and left only $47,589 01 to be provided for out of the State Treasury. The cost of keeping the children in the Penitentiary would be two or three times as much, while the prospect of their reformation there would be almost none at all.

The plan of the Superintendent is to carry on reformation by a combination of regular hours, steady labor, religious and secular instruction, and a fair amount of recreation. The children rise at 6½ in Winter, and 6½ in Summer. On leaving their cells they go at once to the lavatories. They are then paraded, the roll is called, and, after a short religious exercise, they go to the school-rooms for half an hour. After breakfast they are marched to the work-shops, where their task for the day is allotted to each, according to his supposed capacity. Those who are quicker or more industrious get through their task in less time than the others and get more time in the play grounds. Base-ball appears to be the prevailing amusement, and the authorities provide the boys with bats and balls. The girls have sewing and other simple amusements. At 12 o'clock each division goes in its own hall. They are allowed as much soup as they like, a small portion of meat and a small loaf of bread. At 1 o'clock they return to the work-shops. When they have got through their tasks they are again allowed to amuse themselves in the play-ground till 4, when they have supper. At 4½ school is again in order till 8 o'clock, the hour for going to bed. Every boy and girl has a separate cell, which is strongly locked and barred when they are in them. The cells are in long, lofty corridors, rising one tier above another, in the same way as in ordinary prisons. They are kept scrupulously clean, and are frequently whitewashed. The hygienic arrangements are good, consequently the health of the inmates of the Refuge is good. I did not find a single patient in the hospital. The boys and girls in the shops and play-grounds all looked healthy, though I noticed several boys who ought not to be in such an institution. Absence of intellect was plainly written on their features. They should be sent to the asylum for idiots at Syracuse, where they would soon improve under Dr. Wilbur's educational system of instruction and mental development.

Now, as to the trouble which has lately created so much excitement in the Refuge. It is confined to the difficulty of managing a class of boys, incorrigible by nature and habit, who are really confirmed criminals. Boys whose age and antecedents should alone have prevented their being sent to Randall's Island. The law limits the age of boys sent to the Refuge to sixteen. Many boys are sent there by the magistrates who are much older. An incorrigible lad is at last caught stealing or in some other penal offence. He is perhaps eighteen or nineteen years of age, and the Penitentiary or Blackwell's Island stares him in the face. If he be related to a Ward politician—the generality the case—that worthy uses his influence with the committing Magistrate, and secures his committal to the Refuge instead of a sentence to the Penitentiary. The Magistrate surely ought to make some inquiry about the lad's antecedents before sending him to a school for children. But this Ward political influence is used for a far more important and dangerous purpose. A young man committed for an offense which would probably cause him to serve a sentence of eighteen months or two years in the Penitentiary—does not like that idea. His friends immediately set to work to influence the Magistrate. The prisoner, at the investigation, gives an age far below what it really is, and, at the urgent of his sobbing mother, he is sent to the Refuge. Two or three months after he suddenly discovers that he was of age when he came in, or that his twenty-first birthday has happened since he became an inmate. He explains this to the managers, proves his real age, and walks out, they having no legal power to detain any but minors. In this way confirmed thieves get out of my city prison by a three months' stay on Randall's Island, instead of a two or three years' stay on Blackwell's Island. The law is evaded, justice is cheated, and the community is robbed of the services of their depredations. This is a kind of Ward influence that should be exposed to view. It can easily be done by presenting attorneys only do their duty. Let them demand of the Magistrate that a prisoner shall not be sent to the Refuge without absolute proof of his being under sixteen years of age being first produced in Court. Once a case with a stop in values the evil will go on till the Refuge will be worse than useless. It's power for good will be gone; but its power for bad will increase with mushroom growth. The Superintendent tells me that they have a number of these young lads who were committed over age, and that they are constantly committing mischief. It would be almost better that they should be at once discharged, than remain in the Institution to bring about its permanent ruin. That the Refuge can and does reform many young criminals, there is no doubt. In the following true story, author as and unknown of the fact. A few years ago a respectable lad and his wife visited the Refuge. They were evidently people well-to-do in the world. At the termination of their inspection, in which they had both evinced marked interest, the gentleman said to his wife, in the presence of the officer who had conducted them over the building: "Now, I will tell you a great secret. I was brought up here." All were surprised, but their surprise was still greater when one lady rejoined: "Indeed! that is very remarkable; for I was brought up here, too."

THE BONARD WILL.

Opinion of the Surrogate—The Will Sustained—Attempts Made to Prevent the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Materially Benefited.

Surrogate Hutchings, yesterday, rendered his decision in the Bonard will case—a case which has not only been one of importance, but which, during the trial, excited a large degree of public interest. The opinion is exceedingly able, but owing to its unavoidable length cannot be given in full. The following is, therefore, a brief abstract of the main points:

The deceased was a native of France, who came to this country about 1819, and became a citizen of the United States by acts of naturalization, and died at the age of over sixty years, at St. Vincent's Hospital, in this City, on the 20th day of February, 1871. He left a paper propounded as his will, executed Feb. 14, 1871, devising all his real estate to the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, of which Society Henry Bergh is President; and, by a separate clause, bequeathed all his personality to the same Society; but, in a subsequent paragraph, he directed that all moneys should be invested by the executors in "real estate property," for the sole, exclusive, and perpetual use, benefit, and enjoyment of the said Society. There had been offered a will of earlier date, which gave Walter Jones and William H. Bell a considerable sum, as legacies, that were not included in the last will, which expressly revoked all former wills. These latter legacies contested the last one on that account, and it was also contested by the Consul-General of France, intervening on behalf of unknown heirs at law and next of kin of testator; the latter, as well as Jones and Bell, claiming that the devise of the real estate to the Society was illegal, because the Society was not allow

THE GRAND VERDICT.

Republican Majorities Steadily and Rapidly Increasing.

Virginia Declares for Grant, Peace, and True Reconciliation.

The Majority for Greeley in Maryland Down to 1,200.

A Democratic Loss in Georgia of 48,000 Since October.

Contemptuous Repudiation of Horace Greeley by the Nation.

VIRGINIA.

The State for Grant, Peace and Reconciliation.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The following dispatch was received last night:

WARRENTON, Va., Nov. 7.

To President Grant:

Virginia casts her vote for Grant, peace and reconciliation. JNO. S. MOSBY.

Great Republican Gains—Grant's Majority Probably 3,000.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 8.—Sixty-eight counties and cities have been heard from, most of them officially. The Democrats lose in these 19,000, while their gain is only 1,620, showing a Republican net gain of 18,430. This leaves only about 3,500 of the Democratic majority of 1869 to be overcome in the remaining thirty-four counties. If the Republicans gain in the same ratio in these counties, Grant's majority will be about 3,000.

The present estimates elect four Republican Congressmen, viz., Smith, Platt, Stowell, and Thomas, and possibly Lewis in the First District, who is opposed by Braxton. The Democrats elect Hunter, Harris, White, and Bowen.

MARYLAND.

Greeley's Majority Down to 1,200—Inquest on the Body of the Lad Killed in the Riot.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 8.—Mr. C. C. Fulton has just telegraphed to the President as follows:

U. S. Grant, President of the United States, Washington:

Greeley's majority in Maryland is down to 1,200, with a prospect of a further reduction.

C. C. FULTON.

As usual, the Democrats started off with exaggerated claims as to the result, but the official returns are gradually making a better show for the Republicans. Grant runs far ahead of the Congressional candidates.

The inquest in the case of the lad Isaac Ross, who was killed last night during the riot in the Sixth Ward, began this evening before Coroner Switzer, with a very intelligent jury. It is not probable that the real truth about the riot will ever be reached.

Majority for Mr. Lowndes in the Sixth Congressional District—A Republican Gain.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Nov. 8.—Official returns from fifteen districts in Allegany County, Maryland, (First District, yet to hear from,) gives Lloyd Lowndes, Jr., Republican candidate for Congress, 796 majority over John Hitchie, (Democrat,) the present incumbent. The majority for Lowndes in the Sixth District is 1,900 a Republican gain of 2,200 over the last Congressional vote. Hon. Francis Thomas, now Minister to Peru, formerly represented this district.

GEORGIA.

The Republicans Elect Three Congressmen—Greeley's Majority in the State About 12,000.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SAVANNAH, Nov. 8.—It is now certain that the Republicans have elected Andrew Sloan in the First District, R. H. Whiteley in the Second and J. C. Freeman in the Fifth. The State has gone for Greeley by about 12,000 majority. The Democrats attempted to defeat Sloan and Whiteley by fraud. The Democratic managers counted out Republican precincts until they computed the vote of the district to defeat them, but the Republican majorities were larger than the Democrats supposed. Sloan's actual majority is more than 2,000; according to the returns of the Democratic managers he has only about 100 majority.

Seventy-Four Counties Give Greeley 5,621 Majority—The Congressional Representation.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 8.—Seventy-four counties, polling 60,000 votes, give Greeley a majority of 5,621. The vote for O'Conor in the seventy-four counties only reaches 1,024. Gibbs, (Dem.,) for Congress, is defeated in the Fifth District by a small majority. Freeman, (Rad.,) for Congress, is elected. Young, (Dem.,) for Congress, is elected from the Seventh District; Bell, (Dem.,) from the Ninth; Wright, (Dem.,) from the Eighth; Harris, (Dem.,) from the Sixth, and Blount, (Dem.,) from the Fourth. Rawls (Dem.,) is probably elected in the First District. The others are not certain.

ALABAMA.

A Majority of Four to Six Thousand Conceded to Grant and the Republican State Ticket—The Legislature and Congress.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 8.—Grant carried Alabama by from 4,000 to 6,000 majority. The entire Republican State ticket is elected by a small majority. Four, and probably five, Republicans are elected to Congress. The aspect of the Legislature is doubtful, but four votes will cover the majority either way.

LOUISIANA.

A Close Vote, and No Definite Results Shown Yet.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 8.—Returns, mostly unofficial, from forty-four parishes outside of Orleans, give the Republicans a net majority of 6,473. The same parishes, in 1870, gave a net Republican majority of 19,489. The remaining eight parishes, in 1870, gave a net Democratic majority of 472. About one-fourth of the city vote is counted, and gives the Democrats a net majority of 2,334.

ARKANSAS.

The Republicans Carry the State and Elect Three Congressmen.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., Nov. 8.—The election of Asa Hodges (Rep.) in the First District is conceded by 1,800 majority. Snyder, (Rep.,) in the Second District, is reelected by 5,500 majority. Gunter (Dem.) is elected in the Third District by about 2,000 majority. Returns from half the State give Baxter (Rep.) 2,000 majority. His election is thought certain, as also the entire Republican State ticket, with possibly one or two exceptions. The Legislature is Republican.

TENNESSEE.

Improved Democratic Lead Throughout the State—The Returns Still Incomplete.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 8.—Full returns from counties outside of East Tennessee, embracing in about one-fourth of the whole State, give Greeley 4,288 majority. In the same counties in 1870, Brown, Democrat, had 9,884 majority; Democratic loss, 5,596. If the Democratic loss be no greater in the remainder of the State, Greeley's majority will be about 25,000, but Grant's gains in East Tennessee will probably reduce it to 10,000. The increased vote in the counties heard from over 1870 is about 13,000.

Furnas, (Republican,) for Governor, with Grant and Blount in East Tennessee, and Brown, (Democrat,) probably Governor, by a small majority. Hooper Freeman is now 1,400 votes ahead. Additional returns make no change in speculations as to the result for Congressmen.

ILLINOIS.

Congressmen Elect—Republicans and Democrats.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 8.—Returns thus far received indicate the election of Republican Congressmen as follows: In the First District, Rice; Second, Ward; Third, Farwell; Fourth, Burlbut; Fifth, Burchard; Sixth, Hawley; Seventh, Corwin; Eighth, Fort; Ninth, Barrere; Thirteenth, McNulta; Fourteenth, Cullom; Eighteenth, Clements. And Democrats as follows: In the Tenth, Keene; Eleventh, Knapp; Twelfth, Robinson; Fifteenth, Eden; Sixteenth, Swan; Seventeenth, Morrison; Nineteenth, Marshall. The Republican majority in the Legislature and joint ballot is thirty-eight.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 8.—The full vote in the city gives Grant a majority of 5,176; Oglesby, Republican, for Governor, 4,100, while Beveridge, Republican, for Lieutenant-Governor, is beaten in the city by Bluett, elected, who has 1,800 majority.

MISSOURI.

Complete Vote of St. Louis County—The Republican County Ticket Elected—Gaines at the Result in the State.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 8.—Complete returns for this County give Greeley 19,422; Grant, 16,606; Greeley's majority, 2,755. O'Conor polled 236 votes. Woodson, Democrat, for Governor, 19,053; Henderson, Republican, 16,963; Woodson's majority, 2,090.

Of the County ticket, the Republicans elected their Circuit Judge, County Marshal, Public Administrator, Assistant Circuit Attorney, Superintendent of Schools, one County Judge, and have one State Senator out of three, and five Representatives out of fourteen. The contest for Sheriff is very close, Taylor, Democrat, beating McGuire, Republican, by only fourteen votes.

The three Congressional Districts in the County stand thus: First—Stanard, (Rep.,) 5,371; Grosvenor, (Dem.,) 5,129; Second—Wells, (Dem.,) 6,268; Bryson, (Rep.,) 7,007; Third—Stone, (Dem.,) 5,197; Hilton, (Rep.,) 4,697; McBride, (Lib. Dem.,) 1,000.

The Democrat, this morning, estimates the Legislature as follows: Senate—Republicans, 13; Democrats, 18; Sorobeads, 9; House—Republicans, 58; Democrats, 56; Independent, 1; undetermined, 15.

The Republican says the official and reported returns of seventy-one counties give Greeley a majority of 18,924, and that journal expects that the remaining forty-three counties will increase it not less than 10,000.

INDIANA.

Majority for Grant, Official and Reported, 22,184.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—Official returns from seventy-two counties, with reported and estimated majorities from other twenty-two, give Grant 22,184 majority.

CALIFORNIA.

Returns Coming in Slowly—Grant's Majority at the Latest, 11,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—Complete returns have been received from only seven counties. Grant's majority thus far is 10,851. Clayton, Page, Luttrell, and Houghton are elected to Congress.

ELECTION NOTES.

Grant's majority in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, is 7,007, as shown by the official returns.

In Washington County, Pennsylvania, the official vote for Grant is 5,184, and for Greeley, 3,222.

With one district to hear from, it is estimated that Grant will get 2,808 majority, and Dix, 2,321 majority, in Saratoga County, New-York. It will go over rather than under these figures.

In Clinton County, New-York, the vote for Grant is 1,050; for Greeley, 686; Dix, 702; Kernan, 683. For Assembly, Baker, Republican, has 711, and Weed, Democrat, 668.

Outside of Erie, New-York, complete, with the exception of one district in Phelps, gives Grant 1,260 majority, and Dix, 1,530 majority.

The official count of Erie County will vary but few votes from the following: Grant, 17,526; Greeley, 12,290; Dix, 16,081; Kernan, 12,363; Bass, (for Congress,) 17,636; Williams, 12,672.

The official returns give Greeley 2,440 majority in Berks County, and Grant 328 in Cumberland County, 447 in Centre County, and 1,468 in Bucks County.

At the Kennebec Journal office, official returns from 115 towns show a majority for Grant of 38,825.

Husted's Narrow Escape—A Loss of 1,138 Votes.

From the Sing Sing Republican, Nov. 7.

The following exhibit shows the reported majorities in the Third District of Westchester County as compared with the official majorities of Mr. Husted last year:

	Husted. 1872.	Husted. 1871.	Husted. 1872.
Cortlandt	91	602	...
Lewisboro	62	330	...
Mount Pleasant	203	325	105
New-Castle	103	203	100
North Salem	170	175	...
Ossining	23	59	36
Pound Ridge	35	46	...
Somers	5	99	...
Yorktown	32	97	...
Total	726	1,946	241
Hill's majority	225
Husted's majority	371	671
Husted's decreased majority		1,138

The above shows a waning popularity that is astounding. A little more exertion—which it was thought best to reserve for fear of endangering other parts of the Republican ticket of more importance—and Mr. Husted could have been defeated. But the above showing is as bad as a defeat, and death to any further political aspirations of this henchman of Tammany.

The Official Vote of Passaic County, N. J.

The Passaic County Board of Canvassers yesterday completed their work. The following is the official vote:

Grant, 5,148; Greeley, 3,487. Grant's majority, 1,661.

Phelps, Rep., for Congress, 4,082; Woodruff, Dem., 3,086. Phelps' majority, 1,226.

Van Blanerkoff, Rep., for Sheriff, 4,065; Van Winkle, Dem. 3,661. Allen's majority, 1,304.

McDonald, Rep., for Assembly, over Van Iderstine, Dem., 22; Barnes, Rep., for Assembly, over Zeluff, Dem., 324, and Hobart, Rep., for Assembly, over Oakley, Dem., 456.

Three Republican Governors are elected by 5,155, over 3,529 for the Democratic candidate—a majority of 1,625.

Mr. Havemeyer and the New-York Times.

From the Albany Journal, Nov. 7.

The whole State and even the whole country may well rejoice over the election of Mr. Havemeyer as Mayor of New-York. This success crowns the battle of reform, as the course of his administration will perfect its work. The great Metropolis has been ruled and plundered by the most unscrupulous and remorseless gang of public plunderers that ever infested a free community. The honest and intelligent masses, at last into full activity, rose against this monstrous tyranny existing under popular forms. Breaking down its power last year, they have now completed the triumph by substituting genuine reform rule, with the chief of their Committee of Seventy as Mayor.

As the NEW-YORK TRIBUNE led the way in overthrowing the Tammany Ring last year, so it has now led the way in this grand triumph of reform. Its exposure of the Tammany frauds and its unflinching warfare upon the Tammany chiefs were the great agencies in driving Tweed, Sweeny, and the rest out of their places, and its earnest demands for the nomination of Mr. Havemeyer and warm advocacy of his election were the most potent causes of its success. It is to the great credit and honor of the Times that it so intrepidly and faithfully pressed upon Mr. Havemeyer. It did so in the face of singular political complications, but it knew its duty and unswervingly performed it.

In this action the Times has sustained the high reputation it made last year as the sincere and courageous friend of reform. The Tribune, halting and apologizing for the reason, even when it pretended to be Republican, has year after year supported the worst tools of the old Tammany Ring. It thus proved the utter hollowness of all its professions of reform. The Times, on the other hand, has been conspicuous for its fidelity to reform. It would not have been strange if, in a Presidential campaign, it had permitted party feeling to divert it somewhat from the course it had marked out. But it did not. It held true itself and held the Republican Party in the Metropolis true. All honor to it for its manly and honest course.

Burglaries in Peekskill—One of the Burglars Shot and Seventy Injured.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 8.—Several places of business in Peekskill were broken into last night by burglars, but nothing of value stolen. Two of the burglars were discovered in James Wager's store, and one of them shot in the head and seventy wounded. The other escaped.

CONCERNING OF THE PRESS.

Editorial of a Great Metropolitan Journal Whether on the Country.

We continue our extracts from the journals of the country on the result of the Presidential contest:

THE TRIUMPH IN DELAWARE.

From the Wilmington (Del.) Commercial.

The vote which Delaware has just cast is a most gratifying triumph for the true and tried Republicans of this State. The day has been long in dawning, and the night seems at last is gladdening indeed. There are thousands of faithful patient and earnest men in Delaware, who, through years of unmerited effort, have adhered with steadfast courage to the party, and who now may justly rejoice that the triumph for which they hoped has come. That Delaware votes for Grant is a result of which we are proud. His election is by overwhelming odds, but, though this is true, it is also true that Delaware State votes to him stand among the many which constitute to his elevation. Delaware is placed in the Republican column; the whole nation is called to see that she stands now beside the advanced and progressive commonwealths of the Union. Massachusetts votes for Grant, New-York votes for Grant, Pennsylvania votes for Grant, Illinois votes for Grant, California votes for Grant, and Delaware votes for Grant! Whenever the name of our State has been used as the synonym of Republican anti-progressiveness, let it be told. The election of Major Rolland to Congress is one of the substantial points of our success. We look to him to represent our State with sufficiency, fidelity, and enlarged views. Delaware has suffered in the national councils by her persistent adherence to the policy of the obstructive, reactionary minority. Her voice is small, and it has been sounded on the wind side. Henceforth, it will join in swelling the thunder tone of our advancing civilization.

MORE DEMOCRATIC COMPLIMENTS.

From the Hebron Democrat.

The "Liberal" candidate has been, everywhere, from Maine to Texas, a dead weight to the Democratic Party, for where he brought to its support one malcontent Republican, he repelled a score of honest Democrats. The masses of the Democracy are too honest to zealously support a coalition which even seems to sacrifice principle to expediency. How Mr. Greeley came to be nominated at Baltimore, we are unable to comprehend. His nomination—the most snowy-white political blunder recorded in history—we do not care to too curiously inquire, and we only cursorily refer to the consequences of that nomination and blunder, for the lesson which they teach. We leading Democrat, prior to the Baltimore Convention, no leading Democratic paper advocated the nomination of Mr. Greeley. On the contrary, all our recognized leaders and journals vehemently opposed it, and prophesied from it exactly the results which have followed. Yet Mr. Greeley was nominated—for madness ruled the hour—in a moment of excitement, which many mistook for an augury of success.

THE VICTORY IN NEW-JERSEY.

From the Trenton Gazette.

In this State the victory is the most conclusive, overwhelming and satisfactory that the party ever achieved. It is the first time that the Republican Party of New-Jersey carried this State for President and swept the field in a Presidential year. We have carried New-Jersey for Grant and Wilson by not much less than 10,000 majority, have elected six out of the seven members of Congress, and have a largely increased majority in both branches of the Legislature. There are some results in this State that are perfectly astounding. Six weeks ago the election of Republican Congressmen in the Third and Seventh Districts was not regarded as among the probabilities. Yet we have, twenty-four hours after, learned that the carrying of Monmouth County by Amos Clark is perhaps the most remarkable event in the political history of New-Jersey. But even this ceases to be wonderful beside the election of one, and perhaps two, Republican Assemblymen in Hunterdon, and a Republican Senator in Warren. The old and intrepid fastness and reliable strongholds of the New-Jersey Democracy, which have been whirled by this dead wave into the line of Republican counties, are Monmouth, Hudson, Hunterdon, Warren, Somerset and Bergen. Isn't it amazing?

THE FAILURE OF THE CORRUPT POLITICIANS.

From the Cincinnati Gazette.

In the next place, the election is a decision against a most unholy alliance—against a contest based upon false pretenses and conducted without regard to truth or decency. No one will now contend that there was any vital principle involved in the canvass. On the contrary, principles were abandoned, and the struggle was for power, regardless of principle. The candidate of the opposition had not one principle in common with the leaders of the opposition; nor could the latter have much confidence in or respect for the former. On both sides of the alliance, then, it was a fight for spoils. There was nothing honest in the alliance. It was vile in its inception, and in this measure it was foiled, and it will have been well if the outcome had not the people overwhelmed it at the ballot-box. Whatever ground there was for a new party at the outset, this ground was lost when the most corrupt politicians obtained control of the Cincinnati Convention and nominated Greeley and Brown.

THE PERIL ESCAPED.

From the Syracuse Journal.

Since the great rebellion was plotted at the National Capital, there has been no conspiracy which called for such firm resistance on the part of loyal men, as was required to put down the conspiracy which was hatched between the Democratic leaders and the Liberal renegades. Some secession lifted its hands to strike a mortal blow at the heart of the Republic, nothing of so infernal a character has shown itself as the combination which related to Mr. Greeley, and threatened the liberties of the people. But as secession was throttled by Gen. Grant and the people, so has the coalition been throttled by President Grant and the people.

WHAT OVER HALF A MILLION MAJORITY SIGNIFIES.

FIRE TO A SORBERAD.

From the Hartford Times. (Democrat.)

The Grant victory is complete enough. The office-holders are rejoiced—and thousands of voters are rejoicing, too, over this Grant victory, which venges heavily against popular liberty—which humiliates the voters and weakens the hands of the Federal Union—the constitutional power of the President to summon troops to compel a seceding State to return to the Union—the legality of all deals contracted for such purposes—the unlimited power of the Government to levy taxes to pay such debts—the justice of punishing the disabled defenders of the Government—and the supremacy of the Federal authority. During the war, and since its termination, the Democratic Party has either boldly opposed all these claims, or it has quibbled at their recognition and respect. The Republicans did not propose a single one for the suppression of the rebellion that was not opposed by Democrats in Congress or Democrats sitting as Judges in Courts of law. There has not been an election held since (since which the Democratic Party failed or hesitated to express Republicanism in their Vote Record. This expression of Republicanism, when every reflecting man was convinced that the life of the Republic depended on the freedom of the slaves—and that the power vested in humanity had virtues or value, was which to infuse new vigor into our struggling armies, but that God, in His inscrutable sense of justice, decreed that all His children should be free, and that by eternal fixed principles, makes the happiness and rights of one race depend on the happiness and rights of another. The Democratic leaders would never admit these sublime truths. They regarded the war as a mere struggle for political dogmas. When, in reality, it was a contest for the rights of man. All this was yesterday, and the victory has made our Government stronger and purer than ever it was since its establishment. It is a victory which is most fitting to crown the approaching centennial anniversary of our independence. We showed our war power to crush an armed insurrection, and now we exhibit our peltoral force to justify the acts we deemed necessary to war. What more could be asked of a political organization? Only that it keep the Government in its steady course of peace and prosperity, enforcing the law for the right and making just laws to meet all great emergencies.

OPPORTUNITIES IN THE FUTURE.

From the Boston Traveller.

The slanders and misrepresentations of the campaign may be forgiven, but they will not be forgotten, and the emphatic manner in which the people of the country have rebuked malignity and slander has taught a lesson which future political managers, however unprincipled or unscrupulous they may be, will certainly remember. The administration, with its leading measures indorsed by the country, and with an increased majority in the popular branch of Congress, will now be enabled to carry out its policy with the assurance that it is obeying the wishes of the people, and those men in public or in private life who have given two active years of labor and lying to a bad cause, realizing that they have mistaken their mission, will have an opportunity to regain the influence and reputation they have lost.

WRECK OF A SCHOONER.

The North Pacific, Ashore at Watch Hill, Goes to Pieces.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 8.—A dispatch was received at this port to-night, stating that the schooner North Pacific, Eaton, loaded with coal, from Elizabethport for Fall River, and which has been ashore for several days on Napatuxet Point, near Watch Hill, went to pieces in the gale of last night. The North Pacific was built at Cape May in 1870, and was owned by Joseph Eaton & Co., of Narragansett, R. I. The wrecking schooner Young America succeeded in saving the vessel's papers, sails, anchors and chains. Beyond this she is a total loss.

THE LATE GEN. MEADE.

Testimonial of Respect Adopted at a Meeting of Leading Citizens of Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—A large meeting of the most influential citizens of this city was held at the City Hall to-day, to give expression to their great respect for the memory of the late Gen. Meade, and their deep sense of the public loss sustained by the city, State, and nation by his death. Hon. William S. Stokeley, Mayor, presided, and upon the report of a committee, composed of Gen. John F. Hartranft, Hon. A. R. Boric, C. McMichael, Hon. Chas. J. Biddle, Hon. H. M. Phillips, Hon. D. M. Fox, A. Drexel, Hon. Wm. S. Stokeley, and W. V. McKean, the meeting adopted the following testimonial of respect and honor to the memory of Gen. George Gordon Meade:

"The citizens of Philadelphia assembled in general meeting at the call of the Mayor of the city, who has made to them formal public announcement of the decease of their townsman and illustrious citizen, Gen. George G. Meade, place upon record this testimonial of their profound sense of the loss which they in common with the whole country have sustained. We of his city, of his home, who were near to him, and had full opportunity to know his great merit as a man and as a citizen, and we—who, in the dark days of June and July, 1863, were made to feel the peril to the whole country, from which his memorable and decisive victory rescued the nation—we feel in the profoundest sense the heavy loss to the people of our country. We knew him to be a man who was the soul of scrupulous honor in all his relations. As a citizen we knew him to be always chivalrous, of sound judgment and great ability, he gave to the service which he esteemed it a pleasure and duty to devote to the city, the highest value. We knew him to be as kind and magnanimous as he was skilled and valiant as a soldier. Gifted thus, we have lost our citizen, a distinguished citizen, and that the country has lost one of its greatest soldiers, whose grand victory, in the language of his illustrious fellow-soldier, Sherman, brought imperishable glory to the national fame, and majestic results to the fortunes of war, we place upon our public records this expression of our deep sorrow, our loss being irreparable, and the service he rendered to the country being greater than that country will ever now have an opportunity to repay. We further express to the family of Gen. Meade, suddenly bereft of one who was as amiable and faithful in every private relation as he was eminent in every sphere of public duty, our assurance that in their affliction they have the profoundest sympathy of the people of Philadelphia."

Gen. Sherman telegraphed that he would be in attendance with his full staff. He also forwarded the following telegram to Col. Drum, in charge at the head-quarters of the military division, at Twelfth and Grand streets:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 7, 1872.

Col. R. C. Drum, A. A. G.:

Gen. McDowell is charged with the funeral of Gen. Meade, at the cost of the United States. Please see Mrs. Meade and ascertain all her wishes, which shall be sacred. The President will write her today. Some of the Cabinet will surely attend, and I will, with some of my staff. The death of Gen. Meade will be announced in general orders to the army today. I want to know the time and place of burial as soon as possible. W. T. SHERMAN, General.

This evening the Council's Committee, having the funeral in charge, met Gen. Drum, who had temporary charge of the military preparations, and a route of procession was decided upon. There will, it is believed, be no hearse in line, but the casket will be either carried or conveyed on a gun-carriage. There will be at the grave a firing party of thirty men.

Gen. McDowell arrived in the city at a late hour to-night.

The Funeral of Gen. Meade.

The following general order has been issued by Gen. McDowell:

HEAD-QUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE EAST, NEW-YORK CITY, Nov. 8, 1872.

GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 8.—The funeral of the late Major-Gen. George G. Meade, United States Army, will take place from St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, Penn., at 10 A. M., Monday, Nov. 11.

By command of Gen. McDowell:

ASA BIRD GARDNER, First Lieutenant, First Artillery, A. D. C., Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

Military in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—Major-Gen. Prevost, commanding the First Division National Guard, extends an invitation to all military organizations in the Department lately commanded by Gen. George G. Meade, to attend his funeral, which will take place on Monday next.

Gentle Remindings to Bowles.

From the New-Haven Palladium, Nov. 8.

Mr. Bowles is very indignant because his announcement that if he lived in the Hartford District he would vote for Gen. Hawley, has been made public. He even protests against publishing private conversations, conveniently forgetting that he published an account—as it turned out, a false one, too—of what took place in Judge Stallo's parlors at Cincinnati, when Mr. Bowles and the assembled company wept as Carl Schurz performed a dirge on the piano. Having supported Mr. Greeley, he now says his nomination was a political blunder, and that Adams was the man. Well, Adams might have been the man but for Mr. Bowles' indiscretion in publishing a private letter without the permission of the writer. It further appears, according to Mr. Bowles, that if Mr. Greeley had never attempted himself with the Bensons, and Alvords, and Hank Smiths, and John Cochranes, of New-York politics, it might have fared very differently with him in this canvass."

The Hollowness of all the Brags and Boasts Exposed.

From the Richmond (Va.) Enquirer (Dem.)

Convinced, as almost every intelligent editor was at a very early day in the canvass—as early, indeed, as the North Carolina election—that the contest was hopeless; that the election of Mr. Greeley, under the circumstances, was utterly impossible, nevertheless duty compelled them to keep up, not merely a show of fight, but a most vigorous and earnest battle. This was no easy task, especially when the material furnished them was so very scant. It is safe to say that, from him of the Tribune down, there was not a single Democratic or Conservative editor in the land who was not conscious of the fact that, to use a homely phrase, he was "working for a dead horse."

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Consideration of the Laws of the District of Columbia—Rapid Advance in Real Estate Values—Personal.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The codification of all the laws of the District of Columbia will come before Congress this Winter, for its approval or rejection. The codification is claimed to have been well done, and will not be likely to receive any amendments. Indeed, it will not probably be read in Congress except by title, as its reading from the Clerk's desk would require nearly all the sessions of a week. Congress will thus be compelled to rely mainly on the recommendation of the Committee that examines the code. One feature of the law in regard to murder is proposed by this code is the distinction of degrees. The punishment for the second degree is made imprisonment for life, so that the death penalty may be reserved, according to the action of juries, for those cases of such an outrageous description that sentiment generally will demand it. There will be no excuse for juries to acquit on account of what they may regard a too severe penalty.

RAPID ADVANCE IN THE VALUE OF DISTRICT PROPERTY.

The valuation of the taxable property of the District of Columbia, according to the assessments just completed, has increased over $11,000,000 within the year, standing for 1872 at $65,000,000, against $54,045,690 for 1871. These assessments are based in each instance upon the prices of sales nearest each separate piece of property assessed. In remarks upon this increase of the taxable property, it is said:

"This remarkable advance within one single year admits of but one explanation, namely, that the confidence of the people in the new order of things was so strong as to enhance the demand for, and the prices of, realestate in this unprecedented ratio, and it was firmest in that portion of the District where public improvements were anticipated at the earliest moment and upon the largest scale."

THE MINISTER TO BELGIUM.

Hon. J. Russell Jones, Minister to Belgium, lets here in a afternoon for Chicago. He will remain there about two weeks, when he will return here, and shortly after will leave for Brussels.

HIS PRESIDENT GOING TO GEN. MEADE'S FUNERAL.

The President goes over to Philadelphia on Monday to attend the funeral of Gen. Meade. Owing to the pressure of public business he will not make the visit to Kentucky that has been contemplated.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

CONGRATULATIONS FROM THE DIPLOMATIC CORPS.

The members of the Diplomatic Corps, at noon today, called in a body upon the President to tender their congratulations upon his re-election. They were received in the Blue Room by the President and Mrs. Grant, Miss Nellie Grant, and members of the Cabinet and the ladies of their households, as follows: The Secretary of State and Mrs. Fish, the Attorney-General and Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Dr. Sharp, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and Assistant Secretary Cowen, of the Interior Department. Of the Diplomatic Corps Sir Edward Thornton, the British Minister, and lady; Blacque Bey, the Turkish Minister, and lady; Señor Borrero, the Brazilian Minister, and lady; Baron Schloezer, the German Minister; Count Fryze, Russian Minister; Count Cavalli, the Italian Minister; M. de Bellonet, Charge d'Affaires of France, the Minister from that country being absent from the city; M. Delfosse, the Belgian Minister; Admiral Polo, the Spanish Minister; Mr. Stevensen, the Swedish Minister; Señor Cuevas, Minister from the Argentine Republic; Mr. Montes, Japanese Minister, and a number of attaches of the various Legations.

They each congratulated the President heartily upon his re-election, and afterward there was a very cordial social reunion, lasting about half an hour, after which the distinguished company withdrew.

THE VACANT MAJOR-GENERALSHIP.

It is rumored in army circles that Brig.-Gen. O. O. Howard will be promoted to the grade of Major-General, vice Meade, deceased, and will be retired immediately with the full grade of Major-General on account of long and faithful service and wounds received therein. The retirement of Gen. Howard will leave a vacancy in the list of Major-Generals, which, as said yesterday, will probably be filled by the promotion of Gen. Terry or Gen. Canby, and thus reduce the number of Brigadier-Generals to six. Though there is no direct official authority for this statement, it nevertheless finds credence in high military circles, and is very generally thought to be fully correct.

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

The War Department has just issued the twenty-seventh volume of the Roll of Honor, the record of 11,487 graves of deceased Union soldiers interred in national cemeteries at Beaufort, S. C., Natchez and Vicksburg, Miss., additional to volume twenty-four, and Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., additional to volume twenty.

LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD NOTICES.

The Light-house Board gives notice that on and after the night of Friday, Nov. 15, 1872, a fixed white light will be exhibited from each of the two towers recently erected on Grassy Island, Green Bay, to serve as guides for vessels through the new cut into the mouth of the Fox River.

A fog-bell has been established at Point Lookout Light-station, Maryland, detached from the tower, which will be struck by a machine, in intervals of ten seconds, during thick and foggy weather.

REPORT OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER OF THE NAVY.

The annual report of Mr. J. W. King, Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, has been submitted to the Secretary. It embraces several subjects of importance to the navy and marine engineers. First, the economy and results obtained from compound engines, as recently applied to ocean steamers and in large and in European waters; a statement of the plans of machinery designed for vessels to be built. Second, the results of trials of various kinds of screw-propellers on vessels of our own and other nations, with the causes of failure. Third, the subject of the internal corrosion of iron ocean steamers, and of distilled instead of sea water is discussed, with a statement of the experience in our own and the British Navy. Fourth, the kind and extent of the engineering works in the navy-yards, compared with those in foreign dock-yards. Comments are made, and improvements and expansion are recommended.

THE RICHMOND, DANVILLE AND PIEDMONT RAILROAD.

A committee of parties interested in the Richmond, Danville and Piedmont Railroad, wanted to know if there would be any more trouble in regard to the claims of the Government on said road as having been the property of the Confederate States. The Committee claimed that the Confederate Government owed them over $2,000,000. The Secretary has granted them until the 1st of January next in relation to their proofs, and in the meantime has ordered a stay of proceedings until that time.

THE WEATHER.

Synopsis and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9—1 A. M.—Northwesterly to south-westerly winds continue on the lower lakes, and extend over New-England and the Middle States, with increased pressure and clearing and clear weather; in the Ohio Valley and thence to the Gulf, northerly to easterly winds and cloudy weather, with rain in the Mississippi Valley and on the Western Gulf; in the North-west southerly to easterly winds and diminishing pressure with partly cloudy weather, extending to the Western Lakes; in the south Atlantic States, northwesterly to south-easterly winds, cloudy weather and rain.

PROBABILITIES.

The barometer will probably fall in the North-west, with south-westerly winds and partly cloudy weather, extending to the western lakes and Michigan, and to Missouri and Indiana; in the lower Ohio Valley and thence to the Western Gulf, northerly winds, with light rain and cloudy, but clearing weather; in the Eastern Gulf and South Atlantic States, from north-easterly winds threatening weather and rain; on the lower lakes, and thence over the New-England and Middle States, clear weather and north-westerly winds, veering to north-easterly in the latter, with cloudy weather and rain.

Minister Washburne's Return Home.

From the Madison (Wis.) Journal, Nov. 4.

Hon. E. B. Washburne, United States Minister to France, has arrived at his home in Galena, and been warmly welcomed by his old friends and neighbors, who delighted to honor him before he had won for himself national and world-wide fame. His return to this country has given occasion for many rumors and much speculation as to its object, which he has settled by stating that he sought a brief respite from the official duties which have been so arduous, and an opportunity to visit his home, and chose this time in order to cast his vote for President Grant, of whom he has been the staunch friend ever since he first secured his great abilities to the Union cause, by commending him to Gov. Yates, of Illinois, as a man whom he would find valuable in organizing and leading the soldiers of that State. One of the Chicago papers attempted to make merit of a dispatch sent from here on the first announcement from France of Mr. Washburne's probable transfer to a Cabinet position, that nothing was known here of the purpose on his part of retiring from the French mission; whereas the editor might have known that his brother was Governor of this State, was in frequent communication with him, and would likely be advised of his purposes. Gov. Washburn will go to meet his brother at Galena the day after elected, and we hope may induce him, before his return to France, to visit this city, where he would be warmly welcomed.

Grand Republican Demonstration in Hartford—Speeches by Gov. Jewell and Gen. Hawley.

HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 8.—At the grand Republican demonstration here, to-night, speeches were made by Gov. Jewell and Gen. Hawley, both of whom were serenaded.

Gov. Jewell said: We first elected Gen. Grant because of his military deeds, not knowing whether he was a Republican or not; but he has proved himself as capable of leading the Republican Party on Republican ideas as he was the loyal army on questions of loyalty. He (the speaker) stated that it was now the duty, and he believed it would be the pleasure of the party in power to make a good use of the recent overwhelming indorsement it had received, making wisdom, prudence and justice its guiding principle during the next four years.

Gen. Hawley spoke at some length. After alluding to some of the issues settled by the canvass, he closed as follows: Now, if the Republican Party would faithfully serve a confiding nation, and retain its power, it must conduct its relations with foreign nations upon the highest principles, collect the revenue carefully, disburse it honestly, keep expenditures down to the lowest honorable limit, perfect the banking system, return to specie payments, furnish a uniform and stable currency, protect the American citizen, however humble, at home as well as abroad, observe well the limit between State and national authority, deal vigorously, firmly, kindly, and justly with the Indians, honor the purity of the ballot-box, scourge bad men out of office, and out of the councils of the party, encourage the honest efforts of labor to establish better relations with capital, perfect a reform of the civil service, as well by a higher tone of sentiment as by a technical system. In short, be alive to the fact that this is the nineteenth century, and that the party which would govern the leading nation must hourly watch for the constantly-coming opportunities to serve the good cause of the world's better future. It is easy to break the Republican Party into warring fragments within six months. It is easy to retain four-fifths of its best elements in an organization that shall govern the country for a generation to come. Let us stand by our best thoughts and purposes; parties will then take care of themselves.

Newspaper Editors Fined for Contempt of Court—The Horse Disease—Express-Car Burned.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—In the Supreme Court of Illinois, at Ottawa, today, Charles L. Wilson, proprietor, and Andrew Schuman, managing editor, of the Chicago Evening Journal, were fined $100 and $200, respectively, with costs, for contempt of Court, in publishing an editorial commenting upon the Court in connection with the Rafferty murder case. The Chief-Justice, in imposing the fine, said that the Court had no desire to inflict a severe penalty, and that the object of the Court would be accomplished if they showed the Press that it cannot be permitted to attempt to influence the decision of cases pending in Courts.

The horse disease is said to have appeared in Springfield, Ills. The situation here is essentially unchanged. A number of deaths occurred today, but

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE EUSTACE DIAMONDS. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE, author of "Orley Farm," &c. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS. 1872.

Society, like beauty, craves constantly its own depletion. So strong is this desire that even a hashed mutton is better than none, and the most unskillful artist in catoptrics will often succeed, like the vendor of wooden nutmegs, in selling his wares, in spite of what they are, because of the demand for what they should be. There are always priests of this art to be found whenever comedy, for whatever reason, has fallen into desuetude, and where there is intelligence enough among a people to see and regret the neglect. Witness the apparently new-born taste in our own community for plays of what is styled "contemporaneous interest." These productions are not yet models of literary art or even of social accuracy. They copy, for the most part, what their authors suppose to exist, rather than what they knew to exist. They confuse classes, manners, modes of speech, and habits of thought. And yet they meet with no little success, because they try to respond to a certain awakening of the national perception of the function and need of a national comedy. They prosper because of their avowed purpose, even when they fail to compass that purpose, because of the demand for what they profess to be, and in spite of what they are; and their authors deserve credit for recognizing and trying to supply that demand, however their talent, experience or social knowledge may betray them in the matter of execution.

Now, Mr. Anthony Trollope also perceives in his community a like demand—modified, of course, by varying circumstances; and he has the talent, experience, and social knowledge to meet it in a remarkable, we may even add, in a unique, way. The demand is for comedy put in the form of a novel. If we imagine a comedy to be first written for the theatre, and then the stage directions to be thrown into the form of description, and, finally, some graceful and acute accounts of persons and places to be interpolated, with here and there a graphic bit of analysis as to character and motives, we have one of Mr. Trollope's successful novels. It is genuine comedy rather than story-telling that this ingenious writer has taught himself—the close, and more, the minute reflection of the society around him. He has seen and felt this eager desire on the part of the English middle and upper classes to be cleverly copied, and even adroitly satirized. With a keen eye, a firm hand, and a literary judgment ripened by long practice, he has systematically set himself to the task; and he has brought out, in doing so, true comedy, only he has chosen for his intermediary with the public a publisher instead of a manager. There are certainly some advantages in the choice. An author's work, in such a case, is not altered or excised to suit the caprice of a stage director. It is not mangled or inverted to meet the requirements of painters and machinists. It can dispense, much more safely than can a stage play, with the sensational, or melodramatic as elements for clinching popular favor. Besides these, and, for Mr. Trollope, most important consideration of all, his method requires the avoidance of strong contrasts, of unmitigated good or evil in people, of the heroic or romantic in the old-fashioned sense, usually held essential to theatrical effect, and which, even in the best of "contemporaneous" comedies—those of Robertson for example—are still tenderly cherished. Mr. Trollope does not, and, by the nature of his powers, cannot, produce his effects by bold, strong strokes, or by Rembrandt-like surprises of light and shade. He is an artist of wonderful, even microscopic, fidelity of detail, a consummate observer and master of truth in color, and so deals greatly in what looks like monotone. To leave the metaphor, his bad people have often so much good in them, and his good people so much bad, that they are very much more alike than common prejudice in literary art is apt to approve. But, like some other artists, Mr. Trollope now and then pauses to explain and justify his work. In the Eustace Diamonds, his last novel, now before us, he does this sometimes with singular clearness and dexterity; and, in connection with what we have written above, the following passage will be found to interest and to enlighten:

"It is very easy to depict a hero, a man absolutely spotless, perfect as an Arthur, a man honest in all his dealings, equal to Aristides, true in all his speech, indifferent to his own prosperity, struggling for the general good, and above all, faithfully in love. At any rate, it is as easy to do that as to tell of the man who is one hour good and the next bad; who aspires sometimes to the skies and sometimes to hell, but too often follows the lower course. There arose at one time a school of art, which declared to paint the human face as perfect in beauty; and from that time to this, we are discontented unless every woman is drawn for us with some trace of Mona Lisa. We do not know that we have gained much by this untrue portraiture, either in beauty or art. There may be made for us a pretty thing to look at, no doubt; but we knew that that pretty thing is not really visaged as the mistress whom we serve, and those who seek to immortalize beauty in pastels on the canvas. The winds of heaven or the flesh pots of Egypt, or the midnight passions, pains, and perhaps rouge and powder, have made her something different. But still there is the fire of her eye and the eager inquiry of her mouth, and something too, perhaps, of the deserting innocence of youth, which the painter might give us without the Venus of the Madonna touches. But the painter does not drive down. Indeed, he has painted so long after the other fashion that he would hate himself if he knew that he were to give way to the long-forgotten touchings or to the flesh-pots, even even to the winds. And how, my lord, would you, who are giving hundreds, more than hundreds, for the portrait of your dear one, like to see it so paint from the art critic of the day, that she is a brazen-faced hoyden who seems to have had a glass of wine too much, or to have been making her?

* * * * * * *

"The persons whom you cannot care for in a novel because they are so bad, are the very same that you so dearly love in your life because they are so good. To make them and ourselves somewhat better, not by one spring heavenward to perfection, because we cannot so use our legs, but by slow gildings, as we may venture, the object of all teachers, readers, logicians, eclectic pastors, and masters. He who writes tales such as this probably also has, very humbly, some such object distantly before him. A picture of surpassing godlike nobleness, a picture of a King Arthur among men, may perhaps do much. But such pictures cannot do all. When such a picture is painted, as intending to show what a man should be, it is true. If painted to show what men are, it is false. The true picture of life as it is, if it could be adequately painted, would show men what they are and how they might rise, not indeed to perfection but one step first, and then another, on the ladder."

To the literary expert vindication like this is of course superfluous. It is conveyed by the work itself. What Mr. Trollope means and believes is never deeply hidden. But most novels are written for the perusal of numbers, and Mr. Trollope's certainly are; and he has, no doubt, judged wisely in meeting obvious criticism by specific reply. The Eustace Diamonds has no particular plot; and here, again, comes in the method. What life, or episode of life, in reality, has plot? Do not the incidents, and characters, and scenes, run into and cross each other, like the clouds of the sky or the boughs and branches of a forest, so as to present to the glance a blur and a confusion? Do not we find, in real life, that not what we have deliberately undertaken to do, but something brought about by accident is what we really do? Do not strange people, whom we have not taken into account, and accidents quite unforeseen, modify, and even totally deflect our action, in a way that perpetually exemplifies the stale old couplet about men and circumstances? In this wise, we hold that The Eustace Diamonds is faithful to life, if not to traditional stories on canons of life. Of course, there is much to be said on both sides of the case. The question comes back, in a measure, to the ever old and ever new argument about the proper function of art, and of what constitutes its proper relation to nature. To the latter, the heroine of the novel before us, Lizzie, (Lady Eustace) seems to us wonderfully true. She is constantly the sport of circumstances, and yet you know, in any given situation, how she will act. Take, for instance, the stroke of the item-cats, made to hold the diamond necklace—which is worth £10,000, and gives name and raison d'etre to the story—being stolen at Carlisle. This involves an absolutely unexpected contingency both to reader and heroine; yet the former knows as well how the latter will utilize it as if incident and consequence were related at once. There is no paradox here, arising out of the implied mixture of good and bad in the characters, which might be thought to suggest a doubt of what Lizzie would do in this or another contingency; for the reason that we have been taught to see what kind of good and what kind of bad she is likely to do, and the situation admits, for her, of no description of the former. The slender thread on which are strung the incidents and social sketches of the Eustace Diamonds is substantially this: Sir Florian Eustace, a rich, weak, and sickly man, married Lizzie Greystock, a poor, but extremely artful girl. Sir Florian died soon after, leaving his widow handsomely provided for. She had for life, that is to say, an income of four or five thousand pounds a year. Besides this, he bequeathed to her some personal property. Among other things in her keeping at his death was a splendid necklace of diamonds, valued at £10,000. Lady Eustace claimed that her husband had made this a special gift to her. But there was no mention of it in his will, and there was no proof except the lady's word. On the other hand the legal advisers of the Eustace family and the trustees for the heir in entail, (Lizzie's infant son,) held that the necklace was an "heirloom," a piece of family property, going with the estate, and that, as such, Lady Eustace had no right to it, and should give it up. Her refusal to do this, and the efforts of Mr. Camperdown to make her, the bill in Chancery to compel restitution, &c., form the leading outlines of the story; but its interest is entirely subsidiary to the talk and doings of the characters, who are sustained with Mr. Trollope's customary address. They are more than usually numerous. Perhaps for this reason there are more colorless or shadowy people among them than the author commonly gives us. There are certainly not fewer people who are clearly defined and boldly tinted. Lady Linlithgow, although not a principal figure as regards the story, is superb. Her intrepid disregard of euphemisms, the merciless accuracy with which she sees through and directly exposes people's motives, her blunt, strong speech, and her canny, self-helping independence are all very fine, and in novise suggest a copy. The different kinds of weakness and vacillation in the two young men, Frank Greystock and Lord Fawn, are also exceedingly good. We blush for them, and feel at first a shock at the recital of the selfish motives they try to mask behind professed duty to themselves and their position. But on reflection we see that this is not because they are untrue to nature, but because we are not used to current novels to read of such natural blending, in one person, of evil and good. As to Lizzie, there is no denying she is dreadful, and the ladies are sure to protest very much against having her portrait praised. Yet that there are such women we know as well as we know there are such women as Lucy and we may add, such as Lucinda. The dash of poetry, or, rather, of poetic affectation, in Lizzie, is very finely conceived. Her getting by rote a bit of verse here and there, meaning to throw it out in such a way as to suggest knowledge of the whole poem, is quite in keeping with her false and shallow nature; and so is her sitting gazing at "her waves" at Portray, so as to be seen there, and meaning to babble of it afterward in such fashion as shall get her credit for a love of the picturesque. All this is savage enough, doubtless; but it teaches the worth of simplicity and the worthlessness of shams; and he who does this does not work in vain, even if his characters are not "ideal." We have found these people of the Eustace Diamonds deeply interesting and are confident such will prove the general verdict.

Herein, surely, Mr. Trollope must find his experience at odds with some of his theories. He tells us the "reading world" has taught itself not to like such figures, and reasons with it against the lesson. Let us quote his own words on the subject:

"The reading world has taught itself to like best the characters of all but divine men and women. Let the man who paints with pen and ink give the gas-light and the flesh-pots, the handsome and passionate, the prudent and the rouge-pots and pounce-boxes of the world as it is, and he will be told that no one can care a straw for his creations. With whom are we to sympathize? says the reader, who not unnaturally imagines that a hero should be heroic. On, then, to sympathize! Those sympathies are in truth the great and only aim of my work, when you have called the dearest of your friends round you to your hospitable table, how many heroes are there sitting at the board? Your bosom friend, even if he be a knight without fear, is he a knight without reproach? Ivanhoe that you know, did he not press Rebecca's hand? Your Lord Evandale, did he not bring his coronet into play when he strove to win his Edith Bellenden? Was your Tresilian still true and still forgiving when truth and forbearance could avail him nothing? And those sweet girls whom you know, do they never doubt between the poor man they think they love and the rich man whose riches they know they covet?

We rather think the "reading world" will join issue with Mr. Trollope here in his own favor, and insist that, as regards his own works at least, they are a great many "straws" for their creations. We cannot now give extended space or thought to the relative merits of what may be discriminated as the photographic and ideal schools of fiction. But we can say that Mr. Trollope's works, as a distinguished master in the former school, always seem to us to have a decidedly beneficent tendency, apart from their literary power, or their value as tasteful and instructive studies of society and manners. The unhappiness of many, perhaps of a majority, of our lives arises from dwelling too much on the imperfections of others, and too little on our own. We see a fault in some previously valued friend, he betrays in a moment of weakness some ignoble quality, and we begin thenceforth to close the gates of love against him, and to narrow and cramp our own sympathies in proportion. Our friend may have other high and admirable traits, and even what we may have misliked in him may be but transitory, may be overcome, and we may help him to overcome it. But, forgetting the golden rule, we estrange ourselves from him, and by the operation of an inflexible law make ourselves less good and less worthy to be loved by the estrangement. Now, the ideal school of art undoubtedly encourages the habit of mind that leads us to see in this way. By holding up to us "faultless monsters" of virtue or of vice, it leads us, through force of habit, to apply the incantation to real life, and to assume that the character in fault is all must be faulty, or vice versa; a conclusion equally unfavorable to worldly wisdom and to goodness of heart. Mr. Trollope's writing is a constant protest against this attitude, and, whatever his theme is temporarily found as against its opposite or not, it is not to be denied that his mode of applying it must tend to make his readers more genial, more charitable, and more wise. We may be excused for a final and pertinent citation from his own pen on this subject:

"Go into the market, either to buy or sell, and name the thing you desire to part with or to get, as it is, and the market is closed against you. Middling oats are the sweetness of the grazier. A useful horse is a jade even at every point. Good sound port is also juice. A assurance of A1 becomes even a pretense to merit. And yet in real life we are content with some that are really middling, are very glad to have a useful horse, and know that if we drink port at all we must drink some that is neither good nor sound. In those delineations of life and character which we call novels, a similarly imperfective rule is desired. Our own friends around us are not always merry and wise, nor, alas, always honest and true. They are often cross and foolish, and sometimes treacherous and false. They are so, and we are angry. Then we forgive them, but without a consciousness of imperfection on our own part. And we know, or at least believe, that though they may be sometimes treacherous and false, there is a balance of good. We cannot have heroes to dine with us. There are none. And were these heroes to be had, we should not like them. But neither are our friends villains, whose every aspiration is for evil, and whose every moment is a trifle for some achievement worthy of the devil."

Mr. Trollope's style has been the frequent theme of praise "in mouths of wisest censure," and its merits are as positive in the Eustace Diamonds as in his other books. It is crisp and idiomatic, dwells by habit on the idea rather than the word, and so, by consequence, makes the word seem almost always the fittest that could be chosen. We are not over familiar with Mr. Trollope's earlier works, but his present manner seems to us that of a writer who has begun by being somewhat too much of a precisian, and who has acquired ease and developed individuality by long and earnest toil. Over-elaborateness, implying ambition and a keen sense of responsibility, is no bad fault for a beginner, although it possibly may prefigure finish rather than grandeur—the excellence of the Dutch school rather than the Italian. Whatever may be said, however, either of his manner or his matter, it must be owned that Mr. Anthony Trollope is now one of the two best English male novelists; that in his own special walk he is facile princeps, and that the Eustace Diamonds is among the ablest and most amusing of his "society" fictions.

WONDERS OF THE YELLOWSTONE. Edited by JAMES RICHARDSON, New-York: SCRIBNER, ARMSTRONG & CO. 1872.

WONDERS OF SCIENCE. By GUILLEMIN. Translated from the French of AMEDEE GUILLEMIN. By Miss M. G. MEAD. Same publishers.

The volumes forming the Illustrated Library of Wonders, which have been issued from time to time during the last two years, have proved so deservedly popular that the publishers have begun the issue of a companion series, entitled an "Illustrated Library of Travel, Exploration and Adventure." To this second series belongs a volume describing the Yellowstone country, and presenting in one collective form all that is known of the extraordinary natural curiosities of that remarkable region. The editor has performed the work of selecting from all previous accounts of the Yellowstone whatever of interest they contained in the way of thrilling adventure, and has thus made an unusually interesting as well as valuable book. The latest additions to the Library of Wonders is a fair translation of M. Guillemin's description of the Moon. It is designed, of course, for the general public, and, therefore, the fact that it is not an elaborate scientific monograph, in no way detracts from its obvious merits.

The Vice-President Elect on the Victory.

The Republicans of Boston met in Faneuil Hall Tuesday night to exchange congratulations over the glorious results of the elections. Hon. Henry Wilson, Vice-President elect, had quite an ovation when he appeared on the platform. He said he thought a great victory had been won, and thought that all personal triumphs should be merged into the victory of the Republican Party. He hoped that all would feel that they had done their duty, and said the Republican Party was stronger than ever before. They had carried a great deal more "purification," and we have got it. [Applause.] He hoped that the next four years would be better than the last, and that wherever there was a Federal abuse it would be corrected. The Republican Party was not owned by anybody, or he proved it; neither Grant nor any other eminent he may have been, can make us untrue to our principles, which were born in heaven and are inscribed in the New Testament. This election has stamped into the soil of the Northern American Continent Republican ideas, measures and principles; and the country has spoken in a manner that will be felt in accordance therewith. Gen. Grant has been more than vindicated, and stands like a great central sun, the shafts which were hurled against him having fallen harmless at his feet. Let us be magnanimous in this hour of our triumph, let us continue firm in our Republican principles, and hold the Government in our hands. Massachusetts, as usual, has done her duty, and deserves congratulation; and if Pennsylvania has returned a larger majority, we will make Faneuil Hall and Boston ring with her congratulations for our brethren in the Keystone State. In conclusion he thanked the audience for their kindness, and promised to be faithful and true to the great political party which he believed, under God, had saved his country and made it a free land. [Applause.]

Three Boys Carry Phosphorus in their Pockets, and are Fatally Burned.

From the San Francisco Alta, Oct. 30.

The Clay-street Market was the scene of a heart-rending sight about 7 o'clock yesterday morning. The cry of fire attracted a large crowd, and as those engaged in the market and in the streets came rushing in they beheld a boy in flames, and for a few minutes those who were around could not conjecture how the boy was set on fire. A number of men took hold of the boy and threw water and sand over his body, and then tore his burning clothing off. He presented a most pitiable sight, his legs and the lower part of the body being burned in a most horrible manner. Hardly had the first alarm subsided when similar outcries were heard from a second boy running down Clay-street toward Sansome, also on fire, begging for help and running to a drug-store. A third boy ran through the market, all in flames, and no substance was at hand that could put them out. The three boys are Brothers, named Emanuel, Leopold and Emil Strasser, aged respectively eleven, nine and seven years. In coming from their home they passed through China-alley, running from Jackson to Washington streets, whereupon picked up some phosphorus that had been thrown out by the Chinamen, put it in their pockets, and by the time they reached the market, where their grandfather keeps a poultry stall, the phosphorus became heated and set their clothing on fire, inflicting most serious, and probably fatal injuries—the oldest and youngest not being expected to recover. Charles Kaufmann, a butcher, J. Leroy, and several Italians who were in the market at the time, sustained also severe injuries in tearing the clothing from the boys and handling them. The former's hands are so badly burned that it is feared he will lose the use of them both.

Gen. Howard's Recent Visit to the Indians.

From the Chicago Journal, Nov. 5.

Gen. O. O. Howard, who has been on a mission to the Indians of Arizona and New-Mexico, arrived in Chicago on Saturday. On Sunday morning he spoke in the church at Glencoe, at which place two of his brothers reside, and in the evening he addressed Rev. Mr. Bradley's congregation at the Twenty-sixth-Street Church, on the "Missionary Work among the Indians." He gave an interesting account of his recent journeys to Arizona, and explained the disturbed condition of the country, the different friendly and unfriendly Indians, and declared it to be matter of the utmost importance that the policy of the present Administration be maintained, it being to induce the tribes to retire to reservations and cease their nomadic mode of life. He expressed sympathy with the Indians, who have been treated with treachery, but declared that when guilty of crimes they should be promptly and vigorously punished. He advocated the increasing of the force of troops for the better protection of the whites residing in the Indian country, and at the same time urged the more active co-operation of the public with the laborers of the Missionary Society.

THE NEW THEATRE.

Improvement in Stage Mechanism—Grandeur of Auditorium and Exterior Design.

Mr. Fechter's new Lyceum Theatre, in Fourteenth-street, promises to be the most unique building of its kind in the country. From an architectural point of view, the exterior building is a decided acquisition to our City, its treatment being an unexceptional specimen of pure Grecian architecture. The front of the building is 75 feet in width and 85 feet high. The main entrance, or façade, is supported by twelve fluted Corinthian columns, with a pediment over it, supported by four similar columns, and containing an admirable relief, representing poetry, music, painting, and the drama, all done in a chaste and exquisite style. Five doors on the ground floor give ample room for admittance, and a further convenience is found in an admirably-contrived Grecian portico, extending from the front of the building to the edge of the sidewalk, a distance of thirty-six feet, so that in inclement weather it will afford shelter for hundreds of people. The external improvements and conveniences, however, do not stop here, for from the first floor is a fine balcony, extending over the portico, and furnishing a pleasant promenade for the audience during the intermissions between the acts. On entering the vestibule of the theatre, the visitor finds no less than eight flights of stairs leading to the galleries above, which give ample opportunity for a large audience leaving the building in an incredibly short space of time. This improvement is one that will be universally appreciated, and the convenience of the structure has already received the unanimous approval of the Fire Department.

Upon entering the auditorium a wonderful revolution in theatrical architecture becomes apparent. The depth of the theatre is 150 feet from the external wall on Fourteenth-street to the wall at the back of the stage, with a width of 75 feet; and yet the design is so complete that instead of a dreary wilderness of space, the inside of the building wears an air of coziness and comfort. From the floor of the parquet to the dome above is a distance of 70 feet, from which the entire theatre is lighted by an immense chandelier with reflectors. No other lights will be used in the body of the theatre, Mr. Fechter's idea being to keep the theatre as cool as possible, and prevent the uncomfortable effects of gaslights flashing from every available locality. The seating capacity of the house will be for 1,500 persons, in a parquet and two galleries, with the addition of eight private boxes. Each of the boxes will have a separate retiring-room, and one large reception and cloak-room will be for the accommodation of the general audience. A great novelty has been introduced in this portion of the house by constructing each gallery and ceiling of wood, canvassed over and then frescoed, so that they form distinct sounding-boards, it having been proved that for acoustic purposes plastered ceilings are almost useless. Another innovation is seen in the entire disappearance of the orchestra, so that when staccato music, required by the exigencies of melodrama, the mystery that should surround it will be undisturbed. Again comes novelty in the form of the absence of footlights, the entire stage being lighted from one particular source which will be a more inscrutable mystery to the audience than even the music. Springing upon the stage, the most experienced play-goer will be surprised by the improvements introduced. The most striking of these is the flat stage, from proscenium to proscenium and extending back to the rear wall, encircled by an immense sounding-board of concave form, inside of which all the scenery and properties will move and devoting the number of acts kind has been seen in America, and only one theatre in Europe uses the design, which, with all its apparent advantages, must for the present be looked upon as an experiment. This sounding-board is forty-eight feet in height and about seventy-eight feet in circumference, and is constructed of canvas strongly glued upon an iron framework. The face of this is so constructed that whenever it is visible to the audience it will add to the delusion of the scene. The stage proper is forty feet in depth by seventy-two, and in height 90 feet. No grooves will be used in the working of the scenery; every scene or portion of scenery will either be let down from above or raised from beneath. For this purpose the stage, which again shows novelty in being an exact plane, is but a series of traps, square traps, vampires, and other stage mysteries, and twenty-four feet below it is a floor upon which all the complex machinery for elevating scenery, setting up furniture and shooting up imps, demons and fairies, is situated. Twenty-four dressing-rooms and two large green rooms are upon this floor, and the personal comfort of the actors is amply provided for, each dressing-room being heated throughout and furnished with all modern conveniences. Persons who have had much acquaintance with ordinary theatres will congratulate the artists on this point, their convenience being the last thing thought of by the builders of American and English theatres. As already stated, the Lyceum Theatre will have no foot-lights, and further, there will be neither border nor side-lights, so that the periodical burnings of unfortunate ballet girls in nights of the stage is rendered an impossibility here. Not one solitary gas-jet will be seen within fifty feet of the persons on the stage. From behind the proscenium the stage is lighted by reversible volumes of calcium lights, one whole of which, while being entirely practicable, will be contained within a very small circumference. Especial attention is being paid to the seating of the audience. The parquet and dress circle will be furnished with sofas and chairs alternating, each of which are of a new and handsome design. The decorating of the house is only beginning, so that it is not easy to judge of it, but one thing is certain, the walls will be painted in the prevailing colors of gold and pink, and all the reliefs formed of papier mache. The first day of the coming year is destined as Mr. Fechter's opening, when the public will have the opportunity of judging for themselves upon the merits or defects of the house which, at all events, has more claim to novelty than any other within the memory of the oldest playgoer.

THE NEW BIBLO'S GARDEN.

On the 1st of September last the debris was cleared away from the ground on which stood Niblo's Theatre, and today there stands on this spot one of the largest and handsomest theatres in the world. As a mere example of the rapidity with which New-York can do a large work, Niblo's Theatre is remarkable; but, in addition, its present form exhibits a great number of valuable improvements and extensions. The dimensions of the stage and auditorium remain the same as before, and the general appearance of the house will exhibit no marked difference; but in the stage, and the mechanism connected with it, will be found the improvements which are expected to be of such great importance. The theatre itself occupies the rear portion of the premises, the animants, the architecture and design of the building is made entirely subservient to this idea. The decoration in the front of the house promises to be remarkably gorgeous, blue, gold, and crimson being the prevailing colors. The 25th of November is designed for the opening night, and already rehearsals have been begun and almost the entire scenery for the opening spectacle painted and prepared.

The Mackie Homicide—The Political Fight in Thirty-Ninth-Street, Before Election.

An investigation, made by Coroner Young yesterday, into the circumstances surrounding the death of Michael Mackie, which occurred on Thursday, at No. 329 West Thirty-ninth-street, revealed the fact that death had resulted from violence, alleged to have been received at the hands of John Michaels, a cooper, living at No. 219 West Twenty-ninth-street, and Frederick Nitzer, living in Forty-first-street, near Tenth-avenue, during a fracas growing out of political differences. It appeared that Mackie was a stanch adherent of James O'Brien, the Apollo Hall candidate for Mayor, and was so intensely enthusiastic that on Monday evening last he annoyed himself by shouting loudly the name of his preference, while standing in front of his residence. This excited the indignation of Michaels and Nitzer, who both attacked Mackie, knocked him down, stamped upon and kicked him to the most brutal manner, reducing him to insensibility. The assailants then placed Mackie upon a cart and fled. When he regained consciousness, Mackie crawled out from under the cart and made his way home. The next day he went out, and was around the pells for some hours, but feeling ill, he returned home and went to bed. He grew rapidly worse, and died on Thursday, as previously stated. Michaels and Nitzer have been arrested, and are detained to await the result of the inquest, which will be held in a few days. In the meantime Dr. E. T. T. Marsh, Deputy Coroner, will make an autopsy of the remains, to ascertain definitely the cause of death.

Gen. Meade's Obsequies.

The final arrangements for the funeral of Major-Gen. Meade, which will take place at 10 o'clock A. M. on Monday next, from St. Mark's Church, Locust-street, Philadelphia, have not yet been completed, owing to Gen. Mellon's not having received definite instructions from Washington. As soon as they arrive he will at once proceed to make all suitable preparations for the conduct of the funeral ceremonies.

Of the twelve batteries attached to the First United States Artillery, four, B, C, D, and H, under the command of Brevet Lieut.-Col. Closson, who is the senior Captain of the regiment, have been ordered to proceed to Philadelphia.

Bankers in the United States Courts.

Simon Herriman was arrested some time since, with others, for a conspiracy to defraud the Government out of the tax on a large quantity of whisky. Herriman offered a settlement, and a compromise was agreed upon whereby proceedings against him were withdrawn upon the payment of $10,000 and the costs of the prosecution. Herriman paid the money, and a nolle prosequi was formally entered yesterday.

Peter Brabender was committed, in default of $500 bail, yesterday, by Commissioner Shipley, to answer the charge of having in his possession a counterfeit $5 note of the Bank of Commerce. Brabender is a German, and has been employed in Guilleaume Romeis's wire-stitching establishment, at the rate of $12 per week. He was admitted to bail in the sum of $5,000.

Owing to the indisposition of Commissioner Davenport, Stewart of George A. Kimball, who is charged with assaulting a United States Deputy Marshal, was indefinitely postponed.

WILD BEASTS.

The Lions and Tigers Trade—How the Menageries of the Country are Bought and Sold.

In the course of my wanderings around the City I came, the other day, across a menagerist par excellence. He is a trader on a large scale, but is generally very careful not to handle that live stock in which he deals; nor, for that matter, do any of his employees. His business is the importation of every variety of wild beast and bird, from an elephant to a guinea-pig, from an ostrich to a Java sparrow. Does the menagerie of a menagerie lose his elephant, he repairs to this gentleman's repository. He states whether he would prefer an African or an Asiatic elephant. He gives his order according to his fancy, and in due time the animal arrives, and is immediately shipped to wherever his new owner's caravan may happen to be. If an African lion is wanted, a dispatch is at once sent to Capetown; if horned horses, giraffes, or rhinocerosses are in demand, orders are at once sent out to ship to New-York all that can be bought or found. The fact is the sportsman has some fifteen employees, who are scattered over Africa and Asia, and whose sole business consists in collecting rare wild animals for him. So complete are all his arrangements that none are found to compete with him in the business. He has the entire trade to himself, and supplies every menagerie in this country with such animals as they need, from time to time. There are over thirty menageries traveling about the country every year. Every year they lose a certain percentage of their animals from natural death or by accident. Some of the more rare animals are generally delicate, and never become acclimatized, and consequently do not live long. This makes them very costly. Others again, like the giraffe, often die of sea-sickness on the voyage. The giraffe, too, is so awkwardly built that it does not lie down with its legs under it like others of the antelope tribe; consequently if the vessel rolls at sea, it loses its balance, is swung against the side of its cage and frequently breaks its long, ungainly neck. This risk runs up the price of giraffes to a high figure. A year or two ago a well-known showman, who had imported four giraffes through this gentleman's agency, but who took the sea risk on himself, lost them all on the voyage. He could not now get four equally good specimens under $25,000. But, when a cargo does come safely across, the profits to the importer are very large.

It is a great mistake to suppose that any of these animals are captured when full grown. A full-grown lion, could he be trapped and put in a cage, would soon pine away and die. A full-grown, wild elephant is the most savagely treacherous of animals. Even when captured young, and trained in a circus, the elephant betrays these inborn qualities more and more as he grows older. It is only of late years that elephants have been imported from Africa. Many persons will recollect P. T. Barnum's advertisement of the first one—a dwarf—which was to appear in his menagerie. The animal, however, died on the voyage and was consequently never seen in this country. Our monopolist dealer in wild beasts soon after obtained four young elephants from Africa and retained them here to different showmen at about $3,000 apiece. They were "babies." The elephant is an animal of very slow growth. When five years old it does not stand more than three feet high; and one out of the four alluded to above was only thirty inches high. They were, however, a perfect godsend to showmen in the way of starting novelties. One, the thirty-inch one, was coolly exhibited as a dwarf. Another was shown as the offspring of an old female elephant, which died soon after the young one had been born. The youngster first saw the light in his native African jungle. Three of these young elephants are still alive and in this country, but they have grown out of all knowledge, especially the dwarf. The showmen who exhibited the young calf, asserted to have been born in here, made a great hit, as it is pretty generally known that elephants will not breed in this country. Lions breed freely, in fact, there are few menageries which do not have a litter of cubs every year. But the mothers always destroy or desert them, and their are obliged to feed the young lions, and to them in a bottle, similar to that used in rearing babies by hand. The nipple-potamus has also been known to breed in the Zoological Gardens in London. Like the lioness, she destroys her young as soon as they are born; but the attendants in London did not succeed in rearing a young one from its mother, and in bringing it up by hand. But animals brought up in this artificial way, and born in a confined cage, never grow up to be such fine specimens as those born in a state of nature.

As a general thing, all animals are captured in the tropics by native Africans, under instructions from the white agents. If lions are wanted, the natives sally out the country, and either kill the parents, and then secure the cubs, or track the lioness to her den, and then, waiting till she goes hunting for food, secure the opportunity to kill her young. In capturing elephants, they drive them, old and young, into an inclosure, hamstring the old ones so as to disable them from protecting their calves, and then easily secure the young ones. An African lion commands a higher price in the market than an Asiatic lion, on account of his mane. The African lion's mane is longer than that of his Asiatic brother, and is black. The quantity and length of the mane is the test of the value of lions. An African lion sells for $3,000; an Asiatic only $2,000. The same with tigers. The Bengal tiger will command $6,000 in gold; a Brazilian only $4,000 a pair. Camels and dromedaries bring about $1,500 a piece, but white camels have been sold at $2,500 each. A good ostrich can be bought for about $400; elephants from $3,000 to $5,000; horned horses, 50-called, should they prove genuine, only a variety of antelope, from $1,500 upward.

The importation of animals is only a branch of the business; but it is, in this case, very extensive, for the last fifteen years the value of the animals imported having averaged over $100,000 a year. Of course, the dealer in wild animals sells to the public when one wants to sell a superfluous animal or two, or to replace them with finer specimens, they are almost invariably sold direct to this gentleman, or through him, to commission to the proprietors of other menageries. A very few menageries have been made by men who have put some few of the giant sums value their stock of animals at two and three times that figure. The aggregate value of all the wild animals in the different caravans in this country must approximate $2,500,000. In no other country in the world are there so many kept in confinement. The show business is essentially American; and, as a general thing, is a very profitable one.

THE HARLEM COURT-HOUSE.

Investigating Frauds—Testimony of an Albany Lumber-Dealer.

The Senate Committee of Investigation into the Harlem Court-house swindle was resumed yesterday afternoon, in the City Hall, Senators Tiemann and Weismann being the only members present, the former in the chair. Mr. John E. Parsons, for the prosecution, called as the first witness, Melvin H. Meade, of Albany, formerly engaged in the lumber business in that city, who testified: I knew Senator Sandford, who, in 1868 and 1869, was in our employ; Mr. Sandford, when he left us, engaged in the lumber business at Rome, in the firm of Seldon & Sandford; he, I have learned, was a member of the firm of Miller & Co.; this warrant, No. 619, for $6,748 36, in favor of Miller & Co., for lumber furnished to the Ninth District Court-house, I have seen before, and find my own name at the back of it; there is also the indorsement of Miller & Co. above mine, but I don't think it resembles the handwriting of George H. Sandford; the warrant came into my house from my brother, who gave it to me to put into the bank; Mr. Sandford was then engaged in business at Rome, where he had a bank account; do not know why Sandford collected the money in that roundabout way; my brother said he wanted the money in Albany, where he had bills to pay; I collected the money through the Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank in Albany, and gave Mr. Sandford a check for it; this is the check, and he has indorsed it in favor of Mr. Hand, of the Oneida Valley National Bank; it is dated April 31, 1871; I think the word "Oneida" on the back of the warrant and on the check is in the same handwriting.

J. McBride Davidson was next called by Mr. Parsons. Mr. Davidson said he hoped Mr. Parsons would give him until Saturday or Monday to refresh his memory with some memoranda which he expected to receive from Saratoga.

Senator TIEMANN—What time shall we adjourn to?

Mr. DAVIDSON—Any time you may say, to-morrow or Monday, or Tuesday.

Senator TIEMANN—Monday morning, then, at 10 o'clock.

Mr. PARSONS—Although we have subpoenaed other witnesses, Mr. Waterbury will not let them come.

Mr. Nelson J. Waterbury replied that there was not the slightest foundation of truth in that statement; we had done nothing whatever to prevent them being examined. Mr. Parsons retorted that Mr. Waterbury would not let Mr. Genet be examined. Mr. Waterbury said it was true that Mr. Genet was his client, and he would be ready at the proper time. He was quite willing to do all he could to get the witnesses into Court, whether it was John Smallen, or any one else. The Committee then adjourned to Monday.

THE WOODHULL-CHAFLIN TRIAL.

A New Writ of Habeas Corpus—Examination in Col. Blood's Case Before Judge Fowler.

Judge Fancher, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, granted a new writ of habeas corpus in the case of Victoria C. Woodhull and Tennie C. Claflin, directed to Marshal Sharpe, and directing that the petitioners be produced at Jefferson Market Court, before Justice Fowler, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when it was anticipated the examination of Col. Blood would take place, and they be used as witnesses.

The adjourned examination in the case of Col. James H. Blood was commenced before Justice Fowler. The Court was crowded. Within the railed inclosure sat the defendant, Col. Blood, with Mrs. Woodhull and Miss Tennie Claflin, who were anxiously joined by Mr. George Francis Train, Mr. Laurence Cusack, Mr. Buckman, Mr. John D. Townsend, Chauncey Shaffer, Buckman Claflin, father of the lady defendants, and a host of others of both sexes, were also present. Mr. Claflin was accompanied by his counsel, Mr. Henry E. Knox, and Assistant District-Attorney Rollins appeared on the part of the people. Col. Blood was represented by Messrs. Howe and Hummel.

The libelous article having been read by the Assistant District-Attorney, Mr. Luther C. Challis was placed on the stand, and testified that he was first introduced to Tennie C. Claflin by a friend of his, named Jas. Maxwell, at the French ball, at the Academy of Music, and had visited her several times at her residence at her own request. The witness then detailed the circumstances of having received the letter from Miss Claflin, asking him for $200 to help defray the expenses of her lectures at the Academy of Music, and of her having called a few days after, and asked him in person for the money. He refused to give her the $200, and a few days after he received a printed slip of the article which had since been printed in Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, containing the libel for which the parties had been arrested.

Mr. Challis was cross-examined by Mr. Howe, but the line of examination pursued elicited facts totally unfit for publication. The evidence of Mr. Challis, however, completely refuted the allegations contained in the libelous article.

William A. Smith, press printer, No. 1 Frankfort-street, testified that he knew Col. Blood by sight; Blood came and asked him to print a paper, which he afterward found to be Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly; printed 24,000 copies of the paper from plates supplied by Mr. Denyse, stereotyper, and "formed" them on the office of Wood & Reilly; Blood had called on him ten or twelve times, and had taken away the papers.

John C. Williamson, Smith's book-keeper, was sworn, and testified that he had received $50 from Col. Blood, for printing Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly on Oct. 25; thinks defendant was the man, but was not certain.

William S. Denyse, stereotyper, examined: Remembered doing some work, but could not tell what it was, as he did not look at the plates; Col. Blood said he wanted the plates as quick as possible, and waited until nine o'clock; then he went down to Smith's office; could not tell who paid him for that work—his son knew.

James R. Denyse, son of the last witness, testified that he saw Col. Blood at his father's office; the title of the paper stereotyped for Col. Blood was Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly; received $40 from Col. Blood for doing that work, and was instructed by him to make out the bill for Woodhull, Claflin & Co.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES,
New-York City.

The Staats Zeitung is becoming almost as gloomy a paper as the Nation. It said before Mr. Havemeyer's election that, if elected at all, he would owe his elevation to German Democratic, and not to Republican votes. Mr. Ottendorfer was grossly deceived in this calculation, though we do not observe that he has been moved to make confession of his error. Now that Mr. Havemeyer has been elected, the Staats Zeitung thinks we have gained very little, after all. Under the present charter, the Mayor's hands will be so tied that he will "be unable to carry out any positive improvement." But suppose the charter is amended? Then, says the atrabilious Mr. Ottendorfer, that would only be done on condition that the City offices should be filled by Republicans. Our German contemporary is evidently subject to chronic nightmare. First, he has Republican "bargains" with O'Brien on the brain, and that illusion is only dispelled to give place to a terrible foreboding of the wickedness of a Republican Legislature. Suppose that Mr. Ottendorfer should try for once to be a little trustful. The Reform Party in this City is quite prepared to appreciate the value of his co-operation, but if he persists in going about prophesying dismal things in this uncomfortable way, he will hardly encourage his friends, and will certainly give fresh confidence to the men whom he professes to oppose. We asked the Staats Zeitung to take the Republicans at their word when they promised to support Havemeyer. The result has amply justified our pledges on this score. Once again, we ask our German fellow-worker to believe that the Republican Party, in helping to elect a Reform Mayor on a non-partisan platform, considers itself bound to give him the legislation required to secure an executive staff of honest and capable officials without distinction of party.

It is highly desirable that a majority of the voting population of New-York should become firmly impressed with the idea that the time has passed when a man's opinions on national politics form any criterion of his fitness for local office. If this first principle of Municipal Reform has got introduced into the heads of any considerable number of people, it is certainly not because of its being either understood or professed by the majority of local newspapers. Journals so wide apart, in other respects, as the Herald and Staats Zeitung, keep harping on the old string of a general rush for political spoils being the necessary sequel to the close of a local election. Whatever else may be doubtful about the vote for Mr. Havemeyer, it is perfectly certain that a very small portion of it was due to the office-seeking class of either of the political parties. Even in the very lowest ideal, therefore, of public service, the "spoils" belong to the great mass of people who do not make a business of politics. Their wishes will best be consulted, and their support most firmly secured for the future, by the distribution of local offices among the fittest men that can be found, no matter what party they belong to. Mr. Havemeyer has as much right to be surrounded by executive officers of his own choosing, as a new President has to form a Cabinet of men in sympathy with his policy, but public opinion will sustain the Mayor-elect in disregarding the so-called "claims" of any party managers whatever in making new appointments, when the opportunity of doing so presents itself. Republicans who fail to realize the force of this application of the principles of local Reform may possibly be able to see that the surest method to unite against them a compact and irresistible Democratic opposition, would be to arrogate the party-less disposal of offices secured under professions of non-partisan Reform.

Illinois has elected twelve Republicans and seven Democrats to Congress, but has taken special pains to defeat John F. Farnsworth in the Fourth District. This man was signally deserving of the crushing rebuke which he has received. He was a candidate before the Republican Convention for the nomination to Congress, and it was not until he had failed to get it that he discovered that the party was hopelessly corrupt, and undeserving of the support of honest men. With him, as with all the others, the disappointments of personal ambition awakened his conscience, and he has fortunately gone down in the general wreck. Farnsworth will probably live long enough to discover that the affairs of the nation can get along tolerably well without him.

Some light is thrown on the character of the men who frequent the saloons where "pools" on elections and horse-races are sold, by the testimony in the Scannell-Donoghue case. It would seem that these sportsmen are, as a class, utterly destitute of impulses of manliness. When the first shot was fired, those who were not paralyzed with terror ran toward the extreme opposite side of the room, while those who remained stood and saw, without interference, the cowardly murderer fire four shots, "regularly, like clock-work," into the prostrate body of his victim, and then spring up the steps and run away. When Scannell was brought back, the precious crowd had mustered courage to follow the police officer who had him in charge, yelling "Lynch him!" "Hang him!" &c., in a perfectly harmless manner. It is not very strange that men of nerve and determination, like Scannell, choose a crowd of this kind as the safest witnesses of their exploits. Meantime the prisoner's counsel informed the Coroner that he "had a defense," which would be presented in time. Has Scannell come to the deliberate conclusion that he was crazy when he committed the dastardly act?

The last cartoon of Nast evinces great skill, and more than his usual subtlety. The "cast" of mythological characters among the principal participants in the "Liberal" movement is very telling. Mr. Sumner as Jove, Mr. Greeley as the wise Minerva, the innocent T. T. as Cupid, the Junior of the Herald as Neptune, the late Tribune "Manager" as Apollo, and, keenest of all hits, Fenton as Mercury, the god of traffic and thieves. Every one will recognize the point, and the cartoon will be likely to survive some of the broader and more immediately popular ones, in the history of the campaign.

For a time there was an apprehension that Tammany had by some strange accident secured the new Board of Aldermen, but it has been dispelled by the full returns, which show that only four of the nominees of the corruptionists have obtained seats. The new Board has in it a large majority opposed to Tammany, and being composed of men having large business interests in the City, they can be expected to discharge their duties without reference to the needs or demands of the ruffianly classes who have been dominant in our municipal legislature for so many years. The City has the right to expect something substantial in the interests of Reform from the new Board, and we hope and believe we are not to have the disappointments of last year repeated.

The Silent Vote.

The "ruling class" in the United States do not often show themselves. They are a peculiar race. Their characteristics have yet to be pictured by novelist or historian. They form what Disraeli calls "the territorial democracy;" what Englishmen call "the yeomanry," and what we name "the farmers" of this country.

In European journals the current idea of the governing masses in the United States, is that they are a noisy, excitable, revolutionary population, given to change, easily worked upon by passion or feeling, and inclined to radical views of property and government. Nothing could be further from the truth. It was the mistaken impression in regard to this class which led to the errors of judgment in England in regard to our civil war, and which caused similar mistakes with reference to the recent canvass. The farming class of this country are a peculiarly silent body of men, very cautious, exceedingly conservative, (in the best sense,) not given to change, and of the pertinacious kind, who do not readily turn back from what they have undertaken. They are men of common sense and intelligence, but not much addicted to talk, or bluster, or noisy demonstration. They seldom show by violent manifestations what they are going to do. When the war of the rebellion broke out, they did not hold many public meetings, as did their more excitable brethren in the cities, but, as in Massachusetts, they left the plow in the furrow, or, as in Illinois, they handed the farm over to the women, and silently marched at once to the front. And throughout the struggle, with but little noise or demonstration, they continued to send out the prime of their number to die in silence "for the Republic."

Since the war, they have fallen back quietly to their own business, hardly conscious that they had done anything remarkable, but, in their silent way, preserving their own convictions. As a class they are a constant puzzle to professional politicians. And whoever does not know them, or has not studied them, knows nothing of the real power of this nation, and of the future drift of its policy. Reasoning from their characteristics, one can judge of the future in this country infinitely better than from any "tables of returns" or lists of voters. One of the convictions of these silent voters, is that "the Republic must be preserved," and the latest doubt, in the recent canvass, about the new associates of Greeley and his affiliations with the South, was one of their strong points against him. They would not have a single one of the fruits of the bloody war, for which they had suffered so much, put in doubt.

Moreover, they are a hard-headed, clear-sighted generation. Much as they may have read the Weekly Tribune, and smiled over the vagaries of the "honest Horace" in both agriculture and politics, they never dreamed of his being a suitable person in whose hands to put a great trust. He never seemed to them to possess sufficient common sense, wisdom, or experience, for a high executive office. They abhorred his targiversations and shittings for the sake of place. They were willing to read him as agricultural editor, but to have him as President was quite another matter.

Then, the farmer has an especial fear of any of those who are undermining some of the deepest interests of society; he is by nature and habit a conservative. Mr. Greeley's former heresies in regard to property, and the views of some of his present associates in regard to marriage, the dread of his wild financial views, and his ultra protection, no doubt alarmed these dour and silent thinkers. From the beginning we have reasoned from our confidence in this great silent vote. The noise has been much on the other side. Many of the "able editors," and the "eloquent orators," and professional politicians have claimed that they held this unknown multitude by leading-strings. So little are they known, that an "independent" journal in this City—the Nation—put down, a week ago, the State of Michigan as doubtful, and yet it has gone by fifty thousand majority of the silent voters for "the silent man."

All through the country this unknown multitude have come forward, put aside their old leaders and editors, and in their quiet, solid way, against the storm of detraction poured upon Gen. Grant, they have put him in the highest place once more. To this silent multitude we shall always trust in great crises. As long as enlightenment and education can reach them, the interests of the nation are safe in their hands. They will continue to support liberty and good order and public morality, whatever froth of corruption or outbreaks of ignorance and lawlessness may appear in other portions of the country.

The South.

Previous to the election of Tuesday, no one doubted that there were a good many men of lawless temper and desperate fortunes in the South, who chafed under the restraints of a restored Union. There were others, and perhaps as many, who were disgusted with the condition of the Southern State Governments, who believed the evils in those Governments were sustained at Washington, and who looked to the election of Mr. Greeley to bring relief. These latter, in the mean time, regarded with a lenient eye offenses committed against the State Governments. Thus the South was notoriously in a bad way. Some of the States had bad Governments manned by Republicans; others had equally bad Governments, controlled by Democrats, and all suffered from the unsettled condition of the public mind. The result of the election must remove this latter and chief source of difficulty. There is no longer room for hope that lawlessness will be protected at Washington. There is no longer any ground for expecting interference of any kind from the national capital. The South can and must, by peaceable means and by its own exertions, work out its own salvation.

This result is largely due to Southern men, who saw that the nation had determined never again to trust the Democracy, though in disguise, and who determined to make friends conclusively with the mass of the Northern people. They saw that it was of no use to preach a "reconciliation" which had for its first result the restoration of the South to her old domination in the Government. They divined that the answer to that would be: You can have as perfect reconciliation as you desire, but you cannot have the National Government as yet. So they made up their minds to give the one absolutely unquestionable evidence of their good faith and reasonableness by accepting the national candidate for the Presidency.

They were certainly wise, as well as genuinely patriotic, in doing so. They are now masters of the situation. They have earned the right to be heard at Washington, as well as at home, and they are sure to be respectfully listened to in both places.

No one familiar with the facts will deny that the monopoly of indisputable loyalty possessed by the white Republicans of the South has had some bad consequences. Men have been trusted who would not have been, had there been a numerous class of proven good will toward the National Government from whom to choose. Now there is such a class. At the same time, the South has it in its power to elect good men to local offices. None worth mentioning are now disqualified. The choice is free, and the fault will be in themselves if the Southern States do not make a good one. With sound and efficient local Governments, and with as perfect an accord with the loyal sentiment of the people as is now established, the South is on the broad road to prosperity. Her material interests will rapidly feel the favorable influence of the confidence which must now continually increase with reference to her future, and whatever difficulties she may have to encounter, it is almost impossible that they should be more than local and temporary.

The Bonard Will Case.

Surrogate Hutchings' decision in the Bonard will case, the main points of which will be found in another column, comes at an opportune moment. The distemper now so widely prevailing among horses has created a sympathy in the public mind for the unfortunate animal, and an appreciation of his value that will cause general rejoicing at a decision which pronounces the bequest for his benefit, by the kind-hearted old Frenchman, Bonard, a valid and a generous act. Most of our readers can doubtless recall the narrative of how Louis Bonard came to this City from France some twenty-five years ago, and, like many other industrious and thrifty immigrants, managed to accumulate a large property, the whole of which he bequeathed a few days before his death, which occurred in February, 1871, to the "American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals." Bonard appears to have been a solitary, speculative sort of man; he made comparatively few acquaintances and had no relatives—at least none in this country, and none, so far as has been proven, in France. But as is usually the case when a man dies leaving a fortune behind him, there were people who never took any interest in him before ready to demand a share of his estate.

In this case the French Consul appeared as a claimant for the entire French nation—or, at least, for that portion of it which should be able to prove a relationship to Louis Bonard. The proof, as before stated, was not forthcoming; but the ground on which the will was contested by the French Consul, if true, would have invalidated the will, whether there were any French heirs or not. This ground was that the testator was insane; and the proof of his insanity consisted in the avowal, at different times, of his belief in the doctrine of metempsychosis, or the transmigration of souls. Although it was not shown that this belief, or speculation, was in any sense a "hobby" with the testator, or that he ever alluded to it at the time of making his will, or as a reason for making it in the way he did, yet it was argued by the contestant, and the Court was asked to infer that Bonard gave his property to the "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals" because of his belief in metempsychosis, and that the harboring of such a belief was proof of his unsoundness of mind. The Surrogate could not see the force of the argument, and he very effectually disposes of it in the following extracts from his opinion:

"This belief of what is known as metempsychosis, which, simply stated, is a speculation as to the destiny of the soul after death, is urged as an evidence of the insanity of the testator. To no human being has been given the positive knowledge of an existence after death. The instincts of the human mind prompt us to believe, or at least to hope, that, although there may be a death of the body, yet that there is an intellectual or spiritual part of our nature which survives in some form or other. But, in a logical sense, there is no major premise of knowledge; it is, to all of us, either a matter of speculation, or a belief, based on the religious doctrine or tenets which we accept. The world is divided into many sects, each sect presenting a creed more or less different, as to a future state. This very doctrine, metempsychosis, as shown in this case, has been believed in by Pythagoras, Plato, and others of the ancient philosophers and sages of the East, and even in modern times by intellectual, wise and good men, and is at this day accepted by a larger portion of the human race on the globe at large than that which rejects it. Moreover, if a Court is to ascribe insanity to a man, or a class of men constituting a sect, on account of his or their opinion or belief as to a future state, and a particular sect had, in fact, attained to a real knowledge of that future, the logical deduction would necessarily be that a major portion of mankind, comprised in all other and different sects, were of unsound mind or monomaniacs on that subject."

Bonard's abstract opinions as to the future are, therefore, very properly adjudged not to be a proof of insanity; nor can the Surrogate think that the disposition which he made of his property, even if it were proved, as it was not, to have been made in consequence of those opinions, is any evidence of unsoundness of intellect, but rather of humanity, gentleness, and kindness of heart.

"The commission of cruelty to certain useful animals has long been punishable in this State as a misdemeanor, and the prevention of such cruelty, besides being right, has even its salutary moral effect upon man himself in the sense that all forms of cruelty inflicted by him are, more or less, the expression of violent passion or of insensibility, tending to retard his own moral advancement; and now, organizations to prevent cruelty to animals exist extensively here and in Europe, and to that object, liberal contributions are made by our most charitable and thoughtful citizens from year to year, and no reflecting person will withhold his approval of expenditures of money for the purpose, as among the laudable movements of the age. How, then, can it be urged, that the bequest of the testator's entire property to the Society named, is either in itself irrational, or not reconcilable with a sound mind, or that it implies even a belief in the transmigration of souls of men after death, any more, necessarily, than any other forms of belief, that are, generally, in our country accepted as true?"

Other questions arose on the hearing of the case touching the validity of the devise of real estate to an incorporated Society where, as in this case, the act of incorporation did not specially allow the taking of real estate by devise. But the Court decided that this objection was covered by other clauses in the will appointing Mr. Benoit and Mr. Campbell executors. The final decision of Surrogate Hutchings is that, while the will was properly executed and the testator was of sound mind, the devise of real estate to the Society was void; but that the bequest, as to the personalty represented in the executors, is good as a gift. The effect will be to put the property under the control of Mr. Benoit in trust for the Society, and the public may rest easy in the assurance that it will be religiously devoted to the humane purposes contemplated by Mr. Bonard. The value of the estate is said to be about $250,000.

Highwaymen in Office.

More than once we have called attention to the extortions practiced in the Sheriff's office, and protested against their continuance. Expense and protest seemed alike to be useless. With that cynical contempt for public opinion so characteristic of our late lamented Ring, the worthy Sheriff—almost its sole official survivor—went on calmly robbing litigants, as though no such thing as law or justice ever existed. Members of the Bar were either willing to buy his favor by subscription, or slow to realize that the Courts had ceased to be the tools of the infamous system of plunder he represents. So long as they permitted their clients to be defrauded without remonstrance, and the Courts apparently connived at the wrong, the excellent chief of our legal banditti could afford to smile at newspaper denunciation.

But at last there has been found an attorney bold enough to question his exorbitant charges, and a Judge bolder enough to disallow them. The decision of Judge Robinson, rendered on Wednesday, on the bill for Sheriff's fees presented for taxation in the case of Gaynor against Swayne, may not at once put an end to the organized and audacious system of thieving which has so long disgraced this Department of our Municipal affairs, but it will at least deal it a blow from which, with a triumphant Reform sentiment and a Reform Magistracy to back the attack, there ought to be a difficulty in recovering.

In this case, the defendant's property, to satisfy a judgment for something less than a thousand dollars, was levied on, and for some time held in possession of a Deputy Sheriff, prior to sale. The sale never took place, the matter being otherwise settled; but the Sheriff's bill was nevertheless presented for fees amounting to over four hundred dollars, or nearly one-half the value of the property in suit. Appeal was made to the Court of Common Pleas, and Judge Robinson promptly found that out of this enormous charge there was legal justification for exactly nineteen dollars and twenty-nine cents. That is, the Sheriff had deliberately attempted to take out of the pocket of this litigant four hundred dollars, with as little right or scruple as any robber who should have demanded it, pistol in hand, on the highway.

This, as Judge Robinson says, is "only a specimen of the bills constantly emanating from the Sheriff's office," in open and insolent violation of the most explicit provisions of the revised statutes. Now, is it not time that this sort of thing should stop? "The Sheriff," as this admirable and opportune decision goes on to state, "accepts office upon condition of performing its entire duties for such compensation as is specifically allowed by law, and without right to claim any other remuneration. This necessarily includes and limits the power of the officer to delegate to any other person any right to any such extra compensation which he could not himself claim." Of this exorbitant four hundred dollars, how much, we should like to know, was to go into the pocket of Sheriff Brennan; how much to support the crowd of political strikers and loafers that, under the guise of deputy sheriffs or deputies' deputies, do, or fail to do, his work, and are only to be paid by fleecing the unhappy suitor. There is not a lawyer in the City who cannot testify to the rapacity of these cormorants, who is not familiar with their insolent demands for individual baksheesh in addition to their master's extortions.

The conduct of the Sheriff's office has long been a disgrace to our Civic Administration, and we trust that the decision of Judge Robinson will be carefully read and pondered by every one of the men who are to make up our next Legislature. Sheriff Brennan's barefaced robberies must be stopped, and if Sheriff Brennan will not forego them, the City will be only too glad to forego Sheriff Brennan and his entire band of outlaws.

Our African Contemporary.

When Tammany was at the height of its power, the New-York Herald was the most servile of its toadies and the most bombastic among its flatterers. Even its rat-like instinct of deserting a doomed ship, was not sufficient to save it from the folly of defending the Ring after their crimes were clearly brought home to them, and of suppressing the crushing proofs of their guilt. The general public may have underrated the stupidity of the Herald; nobody ever found it possible to underestimate its impudence. It, therefore, excited no surprise when, after the doom of the Ring had long been sealed, its quondam ally suddenly discovered that it had all along opposed Tammany, and had, in fact, been the chief instrument in effecting the triumph of Reform.

This year, the Herald has been, as usual, working on behalf of the cause of corruption and misgovernment, and only discovers, after all its friends have been very badly beaten, that it was really, though nobody suspected it, working on the other side. It has been the personal organ of Mayor Hall; its advocacy was considered by Judge Bedford as a certain guarantee of election; it tried to foist a nobody like J. Grenville Kane upon the people as Mayor; then it tried to help Tammany to scale into power on the shoulders of wealth and respectability, as embodied in Mr. Duncan; and finally, it placed all its marvelous knowledge of local affairs and its wonderful "influence" at the service of Brennan's candidate, Mr. Lawrence. And while thus working to re-establish the despotism of the most corrupt political organization known to our history, it lavished its characteristic abuse upon those who were honestly striving to rescue the City from the clutches of trading politicians. On Monday last its editorial columns contained the following choice specimens of political wisdom:

"This year the Committee of Seventy, impudently assuming to speak for the independent voters of the City, have betrayed the cause of reform by entering into bargains and intrigues for the advancement of one of their own body to the Mayoralty. * * As might have been expected, their intrigue has recoiled upon themselves, and they have been made the tools and scapegoats of the politicians, who have used them only to cheat them in the end. It is now beyond question that the venerable Mr. Havemeyer has been grossly deceived, and that he is to be sold out by the Republicans, on whose votes he relied."

This, of course, places beyond a doubt the correctness of the statement made in the Herald of yesterday, "as to the candidates themselves, we had no choice between them," and ought to secure all the attention due to superior sagacity for its talk about the Republican division of City spoils, and the advent of what is calls a "new Republican Municipal Ring." Of one thing the Herald may be perfectly assured. Among those of its Tammany friends who are able to read, there remain none stupid enough to be taken in by its ludicrous assumption of political penetration, and its exploded claims to political influence. Among all other classes, its title to rank as equally muddle-headed and unprincipled, equally ill-informed and impudent, has long since been generally conceded.

The Boston Tragedy.

Crime seems incapable of originality. Every murder repeats in some way the methods of former tragedies, and instantly recalls incidents of horror which have long been familiar to the public. Thus, the body just found packed up in two barrels, which were floating in Charles River, Boston, brought vividly to mind the Brooklyn incident of years ago, when a human head was picked up in East River, to become, what it has ever since remained, an insoluble mystery. In that case all efforts were unavailing to discover the identity of the deceased, the circumstances of the murder, or any clue to the assassins. That a murder had been committed, and a human body mutilated after death, medical science was able to declare, and that is all that human ingenuity has ever been able to discover.

For two days the Boston tragedy remained in the same unsatisfactory condition. A barrel seen floating upright in the Charles River, being brought to shore, was found to contain a portion of a human body, and a few minutes afterward, the missing portions were discovered in another barrel, also floating in the river. The body being patched up so as to make a careful inspection possible, was found to be of a man past middle age, who, at his death, had been fully clothed in handsome attire, and the hands being soft and white, the two circumstances raised the presumption that the deceased had not belonged to the laboring classes. The skull was crushed, and the head having been severed from the body after death, it was plain that a murder had been committed. But beyond these two meagre facts even conjecture is yet at fault. The place of the murder has not been discovered, nor has its motive yet been more than guessed.

But this is a case which, however unpromising at a first glance, should not long baffle the most ordinary detective skill. The deceased has been speedily identified, and with this knowledge, there ought to be no great delay in laying bare all the incidents of the tragedy, and in unearthing the murderer. The victim was evidently one known to many persons, and the fact that on his person were found some ballots which were not issued until election day, shows that the crime had been committed since Tuesday, and since his death evidence has been found that he was alive on the evening of that day. Having been so recently among them, there can certainly be found among the acquaintances of the deceased some who will be able to give information concerning his whereabouts and proceedings up to the time of his disappearance, by which he can be tracked to the scene of the murder. The place of the crime being discovered, its incidents and its author ought to be speedily placed beyond conjecture.

There is an opportunity presented to detectives in this case, to prove that they may occasionally be of some real service to the community, and we hope those of Boston will not fail to improve it. If the successful working of the case depended upon the detectives of New-York, we would not dare to express any such hope, with such recent and conspicuous failures before us as the Rogers and Nathan cases, to say nothing of older and less celebrated crimes. Our detectives appear to be always too busy in search of stolen property out of which money can be made, to give any attention to such trifling matters as the pursuit of assassins. It remains for the officers of Boston to show themselves more available for the ends of justice.

Clear Out the Swindlers.

Now that the work incident to the election has been finished, Superintendent Kelso could not do better than engage in a crusade against the thousand and one swindlers who make this City their head-quarters. There are several gangs occupying sumptuous apartments in our leading thoroughfares. The men who compose them are as well known at the Central Police Office as are the faces of President Grant and Mr. Horace Greeley to the people of the whole country; but, for some reason or other, there has always been an obstacle in the way of bringing them to justice. The members of the chief gang operating at present have been for a considerable time designated as "saw-dust men." They have tried almost every conceivable trick to extract money from the pockets of gullible countrymen; and although their victims have had warnings by the score, they seem to find little difficulty in drawing them into new snares. The excitement of the Presidential contest, as it appears, has proved of great value to the scoundrels. The public mind was so completely engrossed by the issues of the canvass, that their operations were completely overlooked. The generous-hearted farmers' daughters and innocent bumpkins have, as a result, come in for a large share of attention, and have been robbed of their earnings under all sorts of pretexts. The promise of handsome silk dresses for five dollars has proved irresistible to the young maidens about to become brides; and gold rings and wedding presents of marvelous beauty and extraordinary cheapness, have been equally effective in opening the purse-strings of the intended bride-grooms. New-York swindlers, as our country friends have sufficient reason to know, are by no means deficient in a knowledge of the "state days" of the year. Taking the chances for a good long list of marriages in September and October, they have been vigorously plying the dodge of offering jewelry and dresses at less than half price. Young persons on the brink of matrimony are not usually inclined to be suspicious. On the contrary they are imbued with such a delightful trustfulness in human nature that they forward their post-office orders to the sharpers, and wonder if the letters have miscarried, when they receive no replies.

Now, is it not about time that we had a complete clearance of such rascals from Manhattan Island? They have fattened upon the proceeds of their disreputable schemes quite long enough. If they cannot be brought to trial, and sent to industrial reformatories at Auburn and Sing Sing—this would, probably, be too much to expect—they can, at least, be driven from the City. The late Superintendent Jourdan, having seen that his predecessor had failed to crush the gift jewelers, no sooner assumed office than he placed a patrolman in front of every den, with orders to warn all persons about to enter of their nature. This move proved an immediate success. Superintendent Kelso has it in his power to imitate the Jourdan tactics, and if he wishes to make a decent record as a public officer, an opportunity is here presented that cannot be too speedily used. No half-way measures will meet the wants of the case. He must begin his raids systematically, and keep the swindlers continually under surveillance, until they shall find a residence in New-York no longer profitable. In this labor he will have the moral support of our best citizens, which, in addition to the consciousness that he is faithfully doing his duty, ought to be a sufficient reward for an honest public servant.

MINOR TOPICS.

Several very ludicrous wagers have been carried out in this City within the last few days. As a result of one of them a foolish person the day after election paraded Williamsburg with a placard on his back declaring that he was a Greeley man going West, but, unfortunately, he stopped short at the New-York Ferry. Last night two more of such made a ridiculous exhibition in Union-square by one carrying the other on his back, in fulfillment of a wager. Most of these bets have had for their objects to make the loser ridiculous, and in the case of the gentlemen who have agreed to wheel their opponents about the streets, the winner has kindly shared the silliness of his friend. In Providence the wheelbarrow business was practiced by a young man, with a closely veiled lady as his load. It is reported that the man acted like a donkey and the woman looked very sheepish, which is intrinsically probable.

Sergt. Bates has begun his feat of walking from Edinburgh to London, bearing the American flag displayed on the end of a convenient bean-pole. If he succeeds in carrying it to his journey's end without exciting a single remonstrance in the shape of an egg of advanced age, or a cat whose nine lives have been exhausted, he is to receive a sum of money. Of course, no one will meddle with him, and he will, therefore, accomplish his purpose without undergoing any risk. Now, the really courageous thing for Bates to do would be to carry the English flag through the Sixth Ward of this City; or to parade Donnybrook Fair with a nice, attractive chip neatly balanced on his shoulder. In either of these undertakings there would be an amount of danger that would excite at least a certain respect for his courage. If he accomplished these safely, he would, of course, be satisfied; while, if he was "kilt entirely" by a mob of indignant Celts, his countrymen would have no complaint to make. In his present enterprise he displays no courage and affords the public no reason to expect his welcome suppression.

The election being over, the "body of the unknown man" is multiplying itself with sudden rapidity, and is coming to light daily at various points along the river. Why an election should be closely followed by an increased supply in the casual corpse market may not at first glance be perceived, but the explanation is a very simple one. During the latter days of the campaign the "roughs" of the City—or, in other words, the highwaymen and murderers of the various City "gangs"—were employed in furthering the interests of their candidates and were well supplied with money for "campaign expenses." They, therefore, had neither motive nor leisure for robbery. The end of the political struggle has, however, thrown them out of employment and cut off their supplies. They have, therefore, fallen back upon their usual trade of robbery, and the number of corpses with shabby wounds found along either shore of the City shows that they are actively, and, it may be presumed, profitably at work.

There was a time when the conjuror was one of the most popular of the purveyors of amusement. Originally his feats were principally performed by dexterous manipulation, but of late years he has called in the aid of science, and many of his most remarkable tricks are simply scientific experiments. He may, therefore, be said to have prepared the way for the scientific lecturer, who, armed with scientific ghosts and scientific illusions of all sorts, is now perambulating the country, reaping a richer harvest than ever fell to the lot of the most accomplished wizard. It will, of course, be claimed that the popularity of the scientific lecturer is a proof that the public prefers science to sleight of hand. The truth probably is that the experiments of the lecturer are more astonishing than the tricks of the conjuror, and that for this reason people go to his entertainment who really do not care a particle for the scientific facts which he imparts.

Surely, this nineteenth century might not inaptly be called the Age of Beer. Johnson only spoke the sober truth on an intoxicating topic when, if Topham Beauclerk may be credited, he stalked about Thrales' brewery-garden at the auction, exclaiming, "It is not these vats and barrels of which we have to dispose, but the potentiality of growing rich beyond the dreams of avarice." Thrales' profits averaged some $30,000 a year, but Messrs. Barclay & Perkins—Perkins was his head clerk—his successors, would "think very small beer" of such a sum. Not only in England, but in Germany and the United States, the cry is all for beer. This wholesome tipple has in great measure ousted whisky from Ireland and Scotland during the past quarter of a century—countries in which previously it was almost as cheap as champagne, and now Russia is becoming a beer-drinking country. Great efforts are being made, we are told, to encourage its manufacture and sale by the Government authorities, with the view of induciug the people to prefer it to the very intoxicating and deleterious spirits they now use to excess, and large breweries are at work at St. Petersburg, Moscow, and Riga.

The German Central Committee.

The Central Committee of the German Reform organizations of this City, Oswald Ottendorfer presiding, held a meeting at the Beethoven Mennerchor Hall, in Fifth-street, last night, for the purpose of winding up its affairs growing out of the late campaign. A number of reports in reference to the late Municipal campaign were received, and considerable dissatisfaction was expressed by the Greeley Republican faction of the organization at the result of the election.

AMUSEMENTS.

ITALIAN OPERA.

The performance of "Le Nozze di Figaro," was witnessed by an overflowing audience at the Academy of Music, yesterday. Most of the numbers of the opera have, of late, been sected, cinse and again in the concert-room, but we are not aware that the Italian version, in its entirety, has been done in this City for many years. The well-known pieces are as fresh and delightful as ever; the recitatives, already much reduced in length when compared with the score, might, with all respect for Mozart, be further curtailed without injury to the impression of the work. Cherubino's part is, indeed, the only one wherein the brevity is to be regretted. But it is not given to every singer to have a songstress and an actress like Mme. Pauline Lucca in the role, and hereafter we doubt not that in her absence it will be found sufficiently long with the best of performers. To say that Mme. Lucca made of Cherubino the most prominent character in the opera is only to admit that the artist's position in the announcements was, as usual, the one to which her wits and talent entitle her. Mme. Lucca sang the two airs—"Non so più cosa son," in which the page describes his new-born sensations, and "Voi che sapete," with infinite expression and charm; and while the first-named song was much applauded, the artist, after assuming the latter twice, only escaped a third recital by a firm determination not to comply with the request. In point of acting, the Cherubino of the occasion was all that could be desired; Mlle. Dejaset herself could not wear the garb of the juvenile Don Juan with greater coquetry, nor outdo Mme. Lucca's vivacionnesses in the scene with Susanna, in act the first. In the third act, in which the lady was least concerned, a recall of the singers was considered to have had no response, until Mme. Lucca, who had been missed from the stage for some minutes, reappeared before the curtain. Miss Kellogg sang Susanna with the purity and finish observable in all the lady's efforts, and won repeated evidences of appreciation, fully deserved by the successful execution of an exacting task. Mme. Leviani was the Countess; her duet with Miss Kellogg, commencing "Sull' Aria" was repeated. The other members of Mr. Maretzek's company engaged in the representation were Signor Moriani, who was a sprightly Figaro in point of stage-business, and as precise a singer as the most difficult passages of the score can ever have; Signor Sparapani, who embodied Conte Almaviva; Signor Ronconi, an ever-humorous Bartolo; and Mr. Lyall, an excellent Basilio. Mr. G. Carlberg conducted the orchestra seriously and firmly. Monday, we believe, "Le Nozze" will be given again. At the matinée today, Mme. Lucca is to sing in "La Favorita."

THOMAS' SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The first of the series of symphony concerts to be supplied by Mr. Thomas' orchestra occurs this evening at Steinway Hall. We append the full programme of the performance, one which appeals, by the selections and by their recital, to all appreciative admirers of music.

Overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis" ..... Gluck
THE ENDING BY WAGNER.
Recitative and Aria, "Belmonte and Constanze," Mozart
MR. GEORGE L. OSGOOD.
Symphony No. 7 in A, Op. 92 ..... Beethoven
1. Introduction—Vivace. 2. Allegretto. 3. Scherzo. 4. Finale.
Songs—Five Poems by Lenau, Op. 63 ..... Schumann
Lied eines Schmiedes. (Song of the Blacksmith.)
Meine Rose. (My Rose.)
Kommen und Scheiden. (Coming and Parting.)
Die Stadt. (The Steeples.)
Der schwere Abend. (The Dreary Evening.)
MR. GEORGE L. OSGOOD
"Wotan's Abschied," from "Die Walküren." Wagner
"Mephisto Walzer" ..... Liszt
RUBINSTEIN CONCERTS.

Four recitals of chamber-music by Messrs. Rubenstein, Wieniawski, and the leading soloists of the City, will be given at Steinway Hall, next week. The first may be attended on Tuesday. Mendelssohn's trio in C minor; a Beethoven quartet and Hummel's septet in D minor, are to be the selections for instrumental performance, and these will be supplemented by singing by Mlle. Liebhart and Mlle. Ormény.

OPERA BOUFFE.

The matinée performance of "Barbe-Bleue," to occur at the Olympic Theatre today, and the representation of the same opera which may be attended to-night, are to be the last in which Mlle. Aimée and her associates will take part previous to proceeding to Philadelphia. The two entertainments will doubtless close brilliantly a very successful season.

TWENTY-SECOND REGIMENT CONCERT.

The first promenade concert given this season by the Twenty-second Regiment N. G. S. N. Y., will take place at the armory in Fourteenth-street, near Sixth-avenue, this evening.

EDMUND YATES' LECTURE.

"Good Authors at a Discount"—Some Old Writers and Their Merits.

The favorable impression made by Mr. Yates, on the occasion of his first lecture, was rendered more decided last night, when, before quite a large audience, at Association Hall, he took for his subject, "Good Authors at a Discount." Mr. Yates painted very vividly that happy time when the author sees himself for the first time in print; how the magazine containing his article is pounced upon, and how impatiently he tears open the closed leaves with his finger, and ravies the unfortunate printer should he have omitted a comma. To be a distinguished author was to have, Mr. Yates said, fame, honor and profit, and at the same time to stand a fair chance of being thoroughly hated by the jealous, and to come in for a fair share of abuse. He thought to be thoroughly appreciated by all classes, an author should not attempt too much, for if he ratter the middle class, who made reputations, and they did not care to follow very lofty flights. That all Dickens' works were identified with the feelings of the middle classes, that they were familiar with all his characters in their eccentricities, down to the stammering of his tax-gatherer. He spoke of Thackeray, but did not think he was generally appreciated. Edmund Spencer he cited as among the unappreciated authors. Most people knew he was born in Queen Elizabeth's time, and that he wrote the Poetry Queen; but how few people knew anything more about him. There was, too, Henry Taylor, who wrote Philip Van Artevelde. This drama had no sale, hardly any fame with the general public, and yet Taylor should be placed among the most remarkable authors of the day. The spasmodic school of authorship, of which Bailey, Alexander Smith, and Alexander Smith, were quoted as among the unappreciated authors. Mr. Yates mentioned that frequently in old magazines, dead and lost sight of years ago, one often came across bits of poetry which had a true sweetness and a true distinctiveness, and, with a sad heart, the poem of John Pierpont's, on a lost child, which poem, an American one, he said, he had seen for the first time in an old volume he had picked up at a book-stall. John Tobin he specially mentioned as among the unappreciated authors. Tobin wrote a comedy, which he sent to a manager, who never read it. When Tobin died, "The Honeymoon," which, in manuscript, had remained neglected, was found to have intrinsic merit, and, from the time it was put on the boards, it has held its place. It has always deserted its peculiar charms. Poets, Mr. Yates said, had inner lives of their own, which often escaped their readers. Who would have thought that Tom Hood, who only wrote laughable verses, could have produced such humbling poems as the "Songe of the Shirt" and "The Bridge of Sighs"? The lecturer read, with a great deal of feeling, verses from Spencer and quotations from the brilliant imagery of Bailey and Alexander Smith. His rendering of Tennyson's verses, beginning, "O! pretty page with the dimpled chin," was given with great unction and power. The lecture was as exceeding pleasant one, and fully demonstrated Mr. Yates' ability as a careful critic and a fine reader.

Serenade to Wm. E. Opdyke and Wm. A. Darling.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Great Club of the Nineteenth Ward, Twentieth Assembly District, paraded 300 strong last evening, and serenaded Mr. William E. Opdyke, Republican Assemblyman elect, and Mr. William A. Darling, on Third-avenue, near Fifty-second-street, under command of Capt. James Farnival, and marched in uniform, with banners and torches, to the residences of Messrs. Opdyke and Darling, in Forty-first-street, near Fifth-avenue.

After serenading Mr. Opdyke and Mr. Darling the party visited the houses of Hon. Thomas Murphy and ex-Mayor Opdyke, in recognition of the prominent participation by them in securing a Republican victory.

Subsequently the club went to Republican Head-quarters, at No. 1,009 Third-avenue, and held a public meeting, which was largely attended. Mr. Bernard Fitch presided, and introduced Mr. T. Darling, who made an eloquent address, congratulating the Republican Party on the great victory which it had achieved. He said that the Democrats had been dealt to the entirely different fate of conscriptions, the magnificent fraud, as he characterized it, which had entered for years under Democratic rule. By acting wisely and remaining faithful to the interest of the people, the Republican Party would continue to rule for twenty-five years to come. A few remarks were made by Mr. Opdyke and others, when the meeting adjourned.

THE HORSE DISEASE.

Although the majority of the railroad companies have generally resumed their usual running time, the number of deaths among their stock is by no means satisfactory. The mortality rate from the epidemic has already amounted two per cent, a very considerable figure when it is remembered that over 15,000 horses are usually employed in the service of the railroad companies. The cold winds of the past few days have proved by no means so exhilarating as anticipated, while the rain seems to have increased the cold which most of the horses were affected. The consequence is that a number of the animals which were at active work, and remarked as well spirited, have been attacked with swellings, particularly about the feet and legs, and a large proportion have died. The superintendents of many of the car stables admit the occurrence of several deaths, and it has transpired that thirty-two dead horses have been removed from the stables of a well-known east-side line since the beginning of the current month. The superintendents are of opinion that the horses were not allowed sufficient rest during the period of the epidemic, but they do not think that there is any preventive. Against the attacks of the secondary symptoms, although not believing them necessarily fatal.

A new set of wheels, similar to those used on street-cars, has been fitted to the steam-car at the depot of the Bleecker-street line, and the new vehicle will be tried on the road this afternoon.

The Disease Elsewhere.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Notwithstanding the fine weather of yesterday, which continues today, there are few horses on the streets this morning, those that were worked yesterday having probably suffered a relapse. The officers of the Humane Society appeal to the citizens not to work their horses if they retain any symptoms of the disease, as it will be almost certain to result in their death. Many deaths occurred yesterday, and it is believed that 100 horses have died in the past two days. Business is still much obstructed by the lack of transportation facilities, though a great many ox-teams are employed in hauling merchandise.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Nov. 8.—Capt. John Cannon, of Lexington, Ky., one-third owner of the steamer Kate, which sunk at Helena, has $20,000 insurance on her in Cincinnati companies. Other interests are insured for $5,000 in the Enterprise Company of Cincinnati, and the Franklin Company of Wheeling has also a small risk.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Nov. 8.—The horse disease has appeared in Keating, Penn., in a mild form. There are now 500 cases, but there have been no deaths.

ALBANY, Ga., Nov. 8.—The horse disease has appeared here, but is confined to livery stables. All reported to date are four cases. Two cases have occurred.

A Tammany Trick.

Mr. Herman Rocke, the Republican candidate for Assistant Alderman in the Twentieth Assembly District, claims that an effort is being made to count him out. He succeeded in obtaining from the Nineteenth Precinct Police the total number of ballots credited to him, the figures being 2,257. Up to a late hour yesterday no returns were made at Police Head-quarters on Mr. Rocke's vote, though they announced that Isaac Somers, the Tammany nominee, was elected by a small majority. The Republicans in the Twentieth Assembly District believe that Mr. Rocke received the largest number of votes, but it appears that several hundred ballots cast for him were spelt "Herman Roecke," and that all of these were thrown out by the canvassers. On these grounds the seat of Mr. Somers will be contested by Mr. Rocke, as he believes he can show that he has been legally and fairly elected.

Paying the Election Pools Last Night.

Paying pools on the results of the late election proceeded briskly at the different betting resorts yesterday, during the day and evening. The rumors which found circulation in regard to the success of some candidates, who were afterward found to be beaten, delayed the settling of many of the pools hitherto. At Thomas's, during the day, about $15,000 were paid out to the holders of successful tickets in the French pools. The pool-seller, in response to an inquiry by a Times reporter as to the success of the French pool system in this City, replied that the expectations of its originators were more than realized, and that it is likely to be adopted generally at race-courses, regattas, and boating matches throughout the country the ensuing year. The rush of ticket-holders was greatest in the morning, and in two or three days it is expected that the bulk of the tickets will be received and canceled.

The Havemeyer tickets are settled at $15 unless, and the Dix tickets at $1 56. During the day $255,000 were disbursed at Johnson's. The bets settled were mostly on the New-York Mayoralty, on the State ticket, on the Pennsylvania and general elections. Bets on the Indiana election, on Greeley's majority in New-York, and on the number of electoral votes, he has received are not yet decided. There are still $50,000 remaining at Johnson's, which will be paid as soon as accurate election returns are received, which will justify the disbursement of the money.

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society was held at the Bible House, Astor-place, on Thursday.

The decease of James Suydam and Marshall S. Bidwell was announced.

Three new auxiliaries were recognized, one in each of the States of North Carolina, Alabama, and Texas.

Communications were received from Monterey, Montevideo, Shanghai, and Barcelona, showing good work in Bible distribution.

Grants of books were also made. A grant of $1,000 in books was made to the South-western Bible Society, New-Orleans, for their gratuitous work, and numerous others to feeble auxiliaries and to individuals in various languages. The entire number of volumes granted is 9,088, including thirteen volumes in raised letters for the blind. Besides these others to the amount of $1,800 were granted for the domestic field, and $2,200 for work in foreign countries.

A memorial paper was adopted in regard to Mr. James Suydam, and a committee was appointed to prepare a suitable testimonial in regard to Marshall S. Bidwell, Esq.

Total Vote for Aldermen.

The following is the vote for the Aldermen elected:

Peter Gilsey	70260
J. A. Mosbeimer	56,619
S. R. H. Vance	51823
Jenkins Van Schaick	50759
C. P. G. Billings	50295
Oswald Ottendorfer	50128
George Koch	49,900
John J. Morris	49001
S. V. B. Cooper	48699
Peter Kehr	48468
John Falconer	48023
John Reilly	47948
Robert McCafferty	47463
Richard Fitzgerald	47001
Patrick Lynaghl	46898

The last four Aldermen elect are the nominees of Tammany Hall.

Destructive Fire in West Twenty-Sixth-street.

Shortly after 7 o'clock last night a fire was discovered in the four-story building, Nos. 459 and 461 West Twenty-sixth-street, occupied by the Marchar Pretzer-frame Manufacturing Company. The inflammable nature of the property stored in the building gave the flames tremendous ascendency as to render the efforts of the firemen on their arrival nearly futile, and the premises were destroyed, causing a damage of $35,000 to building and $20,000 to stock, which is but partially insured. The flames spread to the adjoining stables of J. Hoenig, No. 459 West Twenty-seventh, and the carriage manufactory of J. F. Goodhall, No. 243 West Twenty-seventh-street, causing a damage of $600 to stock and $600 to building; insured.

The Election in Hudson County.

The Hudson County Board of Canvassers met yesterday at noon at the Court-house, and elected Matthew Swan Chairman, and James Madden and Frank Wood Secretaries. The votes cast for "Jacob Reinhardt for Sheriff" in ward 1 were decided should not be counted for John Reinhardt. This will probably defeat the latter, and elect Van Keuren, Republican, Sheriff. The Board then was about to proceed with a recount by order to determine whether one of the Jacob Reinhardt votes had been counted for John Reinhardt, when it was found that returns from one precinct had not been made. As the law provides that the returns must be completed, it was not possible to go on, and the Board adjourned until this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

THE UNITED STATES TREASURY.

The Financial Twelve-Month—Monthly Results—The Immense Revenues—Their Rise, Magnitude, and Reduction.

Secretary Boutwell announced, on the 2d of October, a monthly reduction of over $10,000,000 on the public debt for the month of September. The total reduction since March, 1869, approximates $200,000,000.

No patriotic citizen can contemplate the financial achievements of the United States Treasury with feelings other than those of profound admiration and pride. When the Government was transferred into the hands of the Republican Party, the United States Treasury was empty, and their predecessors had been borrowing money its rate as twelve per cent. interest. The protracted war immediately precipitated upon the country involved the Government in expenses amounting at first to $500,000 per day. This was increased, as the war progressed, to $1,000,000, then to $2,000,000, and ultimately to $3,000,000, as the records show. But the Administration, aided by Congress, proved itself equal to the emergency. The army was always provided for most bountifully, and all financial obligations were promptly met as soon as they were incurred.

At no time was over eight per cent. paid for money by the United States Treasury, and that maximum was soon reduced to seven and six per cent. The last loan was at five per cent.; and today Mr. Boutwell holds a standing offer from bankers abroad to take, when he is ready, the balance unsold of the bonds authorized to be issued under the provisions of the Funding bill. They will be taken at five, four and a half, and four per cent., according to the provisions of the bill, excepting that the interest shall be paid in London instead of Washington and New-York.

This tells the story. It also establishes the fact most conclusively, against all declarations and misrepresentations to the contrary, that the financial success of the Government can find no parallel in the history of nations. The recent French loan has commanded admiration, but it falls far short of the achievements of the American Government. The French bonds, it is true, pay only five per cent. interest, but they were sold for eighty-five cents on the dollar, making a loss of fifteen per cent., while the United States five per cent. bonds were taken at par. The one was a sacrifice, the other a success.

The borrowing power of the United States Government is stronger today than at any former period, and its bonds are taken for permanent investment at low rates of interest, in the great European money centres, more readily than those of the strongest Powers in the Old World. This arises from the fact that the Government has been placed upon a firm basis. No standing armies are maintained as a perpetual and exhaustive tax, while the Government adheres to a peace policy with all the world. And lastly, through the efforts of wise Federal and State Legislation the resources and productiveness of the country have become more remunerative than those of any other nation.

And here we are led to an examination of the origin, magnitude, and reduction of internal revenue taxes. There is no better test of a people's fidelity and patriotism than the manner in which they respond to the demands of just revenue laws. The commencement of the rebellion necessitated the immediate inauguration of a system of taxes, which was extended from year to year, as the war increased, until every article of manufacture, food, and clothing was laid under tribute, while a tax was also exacted from personal incomes. Such was the extent of this system and the amount of revenue derived from it, that in a single year (1866) it returned into the United States Treasury over $311,000,000. From the time of its inception to the 30th of June last, eleven years, the revenue receipts from this source alone, amounted to the enormous sum of $1,754,939,561 12! Yet this burden was borne by the people almost without a murmur, and this vast amount of treasure was turned over as a grateful contribution to aid of the Government during its years of trial—resulting from a costly war.

From March, 1865, to July, 1866, during which internal revenue taxation was at its greatest height, all manufactures of every description, with a few unimportant exceptions, were subject to tax. The list of manufactures and products enumerated on the schedule, together with the articles not enumerated, but subject to a five per cent. ad valorem tax, amounted to several thousands. In addition to all these, a tax was also imposed on all slaughtered cattle, sheep, and swine; on the gross receipts of advertisements, lotteries, theatres, operas, circuses, &c.; of express, insurance, and telegraph companies; of canals, steam-boats, ships, barges, stage-coaches, railroads, &c.; on dealers' sales, auction sales, and brokers' sales of merchandise, stocks, bonds, foreign exchange, gold and silver bullion, and coin; on billiard-tables, carriages, and piano-fortes, gold watches, yachts, gold and silver-plated articles of luxury kept for use; on bank capital, circulation, and deposits; on passports, licenses, and successions; on dividends and additions to surplus of banks, railroads, canal, turnpike, and insurance companies; on salaries of United States officers and employees; on the annual income of all persons in excess of $600; on legal instruments, such as deeds, bonds, mortgages, &c.; and on friction-matches and playing-cards. In addition, all persons engaged as auctioneers, brokers, dealers, peddlers, manufacturers, lawyers, physicians, &c., were required to pay a special tax for carrying on their business, trade, or profession. In short, nearly every available source was made to contribute to the necessities of the Government.

When the opportunity offered, not a day was lost by the Government in commencing a gradual reduction of the taxes. The policy has been kept up since 1866. The following statement shows the successive reductions of the internal revenue taxes by acts of Congress, viz.:

By act of July 13, 1866	$408,000,000
By act of March 2, 1867	40,000,000
By act of Feb. 2, 1868	25,000,000
By act of March 1 and July 20, 1868	45,000,000
By act of July 14, 1870	65,000,000
By act of June 6, 1872	34,000,000
Total annual reduction	$640,000,000

These figures represent a most significant achievement, viewed in connection with the fact that the revenue was at the same time reducing the public debt at the rate of $100,000,000 per annum!

The only articles now taxed are spirits, fermented liquors, tobacco, bank checks, drafts or orders, (only two cents each, without regard to the amount of sheet,) and a small tax on bank deposits, bank capital and circulation, and none used for circulation, and a tax by stamps on proprietary medicines, perfumery, matches, cigar-lights and playing-cards. The taxes upon all other articles, and upon income, have all been repealed.

The act of June 6, 1872, it was generally supposed, would bring the receipts for the present fiscal year down to about $110,000,000; but owing to the increase of products, the general expansion of business, and extraordinary prosperity of the country, the returns for the first quarter indicate a total collection for the year of about $130,000,000, a sum very nearly equal to the amount collected last year, and before the last reduction of $20,000,000 was made.

There is another fact worthy of note in this connection, and that is the economy secured in the collection of the revenue, especially during late years, when the reduction made in the revenues would find directly to increase the percentage cost of assessment and collection.

The percentage cost of assessing and collecting the revenue—adhesive stamps excepted—from 1863 to 1871, as deducted from the expenses allowed by the Fifth Auditor, by whom the accounts of internal revenue officers are adjusted, is as follows:

PER CENTAGE COST OF ASSESSING AND COLLECTING.

Fiscal Years.		Fiscal Years.
1863	6 per cent.	1868	4 4-10 per cent.
1864	4 per cent.	1869	4 2-10 per cent.
1865	3 4-10 per cent.	1870	3 9-10 per cent.
1866	3 3-10 per cent.	1871	3 8-10 per cent.
1867	3 3-10 per cent.

Such, in brief, is the history of our "internal revenue system." It was a gigantic scheme, and it has achieved a great work in the economy of the Government during its dark days and years of heavy burdens; while at the same time it indicated to the world the vast resources of the country and the alacrity with which the people respond to the call of their Government in the hour of its need.

Discovering Allegations of Two Counterfeits.

From the San Francisco Bulletin, Nov. 1.

Among the large number of new citizens admitted in the Fifteenth District Court, yesterday, was one Joseph Grunes, a native of Elsass. Judge Dwinelle required him to renounce all allegiance to every foreign country, Prince of potentates, (in the usual form,) and particularly the Emperor of Germany and the Republic of France." As the crafty scoundrel hesitated on the Constitution, the Judge observed that he understood that the people of France had driven Prussia and Bismarck out of France, and the conquered territory, with the exception of two Governments should have their allegiance; he therefore thought it proper to make applicants for citizenship from that territory renounce both France and Germany. At this the new citizen exclaimed with much emotion that he was a Frenchman. Judge Dwinelle reminded him that he was an American now. "Yes, Judge," replied the applicant, "I am an American now."

PLYMOUTH CHURCH.

Memorial Proposed by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher—Many Suggestions and Final Action Last Night.

In place of the usual Friday evening services in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last night, the pastor, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, announced that the report of a committee, appointed some three weeks ago to consider the project of a memorial to mark the first twenty-five years' life of the church, would be received and discussed. The Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Beecher, then stated, informally, that the memorial had been proposed, not to glorify the congregation or its pastor, but as a grateful offering to their Creator for past blessings. Several propositions had been submitted to the Committee for consideration, one of which was the erection of a sailors' home in New-York; another, the building of a memorial church, near Prospect Park, and still another, the founding of a great university in Brooklyn. Others proposed a home for the destitute members of the church, or a free hospital for the city, or a new building for the Young Men's Christian Association. To these various propositions many objections were made in the Committee's meetings, and it was finally determined to adopt the suggestions which Mr. Beecher himself had submitted on the subject. His ideas were that a permanent fund should be established, the income of which should forever be appropriated to paying all the running expenses of the two favorite enterprises of the church, the Navy and Bethel Missions. Plymouth Church owns the buildings of those flourishing and useful missions, with the ground on which they stand, free of debt, and their expenses are paid from the revenues of the parent church. But in the course of time changes will occur, and the fate of the missions may depend on the fate of the church, and no better thing could be done than to endow them in perpetuity, and thus remove contingencies. It was proposed to raise the sum of $50,000 for the fund, to be divided equally between the two missions.

Mr. Beecher followed, with his reasons for proposing such a memorial, claiming that these missions illustrated, in a very peculiar manner, the idea that it was not public preaching alone, but the quiet, devoted work of these humbler agencies which really reached the hearts of men. He considered them invaluable aids to Christian effort, and believed that they were Plymouth's best monuments. He wished to have them grow, and be secure to their growth hereafter. Mr. Beecher spoke feelingly of the noble souls who had been devoted to the work of the missions. He said that in New-York there were 150,000 people below Canal-street almost destitute of missions, and the same could be said of the three-quarters of Brooklyn before long if something were not done to prevent such a neglect. A population, he said, that cannot sustain a church is just the population that needs a church. The greatest memorial the congregation could offer would be the establishment on a sure basis of every mission of the church. During the discussion one member wished to have the memorial more of a personal nature, identifying Mr. Beecher prominently with it. The pastor replied in a touching manner, and hoped that while he lived his name might not be connected with any enterprise of the congregation. The memorial should express their gratitude to Heaven. After further remarks, it was voted to accept the report, and the Committee were instructed to prepare the details and devise means for collecting the fund.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The attendance at the Exchange yesterday, Friday, Nov. 8, was large, and considerable business was transacted, most of the sales proposed being consummated, and generally with fair results. Bidding, as a rule, was prompt, and the sums realized, except in one or two instances, better than usual at legal sales. The following is a review of the proceedings:

James M. Milbur, by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure, under the direction of Richard C. Beamish, Esq., referee, sold three four-story brick tenement-houses and lots, situate on the south side of West Twenty-fifth-street, 100 feet west of Ninth-avenue, the lots being all full size, for $18,000 cash, the purchaser being Wm. A. Bigelow, the owner of second mortgage upon the property. The property was sold subject to a first mortgage upon each lot of $5,000, but the price realized (the above noted) included this sum. A. J. Bleecker, Sen. & Co., by order of the Court of Common Pleas, in foreclosure, under the direction of Philo T. Ruggles, Esq., referee, disposed of a lot of land, 25.7 by 80 by 24.3 by 80.2, located on the west side of Marion-street, 100.3 feet north of Broome-street, with two small two-story and attic brick buildings thereon, known as Nos. 10 and 12 Marion-street, for $7,100; purchaser, Alfred Eno. The same firm, under a similar order, same referee, also sold a three-story and attic brick house and lot, situate on the south side of East Eighty-third-street, 254.2 feet east of Second-avenue, lot 17 by 102.2, for $6,100, which was purchased by Hannah H. Tourneur, a second-room street. V. K. Stevenson & Son, under a Supreme Court foreclosure decree, Cephas Brainard, Esq., referee, sold a four-story high-stoop brownstone-front house (unfinished) and lot, (letter B by 100.4) on the north side of West Forty-sixth-street, 400 feet west of Sixth-avenue, to Brooks Nevi, a party to interest, for $600 over and above the mortgage, which was thus reduced to about $10,100. The auctioneer stated that there were other liens upon the property, but the amount was not given, and therefore the exact price realized is in doubt. The closing sale of the day was made by E. H. Ludlow & Co., who, under a Supreme Court foreclosure decree, Alfred T. Acker, Esq., referee, sold the following leasehold premises: No. 46 East Ninth-street, south side, between Broadway and University-place, about 325 feet distant from each avenue, embracing a lease of a lot 25 by 92 11', with a three-story and attic brick dwelling and large high-stoop brick house thereon; house in size 35 by 48, with two-story extension 39 feet in depth; lease from Sailors' Snug Harbor expiring May 1, 1875; ground rent $200 per year and taxes, with one covenant for renewal for twenty-one years; sold to Michael Lemm, plaintiff in the legal action, for $9,900 over and above mortgage of $4,000; total price, $13,900—a low figure. The same firm announced that the other legal sale noticed for the day of store and lot No. 66 Front-street would not be offered until Friday, the 22d inst., next week, the 14th inst., when the property would certainly be offered. In regard to the legal sale in charge of Muller, Wilkins & Co., expected to occur, of house and lot on West One Hundred and Twenty-eight-street, 150 feet west of Seventh-avenue, we learn that the suit involving the disposition of the same has been settled.

For today, as the Exchange, no sales are announced, but next week will be one of some activity, as the auctions projected are numerous. The sale of most importance, as contemplated, is that by Muller, Wilkins & Co., on Thursday, of a lot of land on Fifth-avenue, fronting Central Park, between Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh streets. Several suburban auctions are also proposed, at which desirable realty will be offered, namely: At Bayonne City, Bergen Point, N. J., on Monday, by Jere. Johnson Jr., at Newark, N. J., by A. L. Mulver, Jr., on Wednesday, by Chas. Conley, at Exchange, of property on Central-avenue, Westchester County, by Winans, Sands & Garretson. Full details of all the proposed sales will appear, as usual, in this column on Monday.

At private contract the following recent sales are reported:

By E. H. Ludlow & Co., No. 3 Pine-street, the four story br.wn-stone front house and lot No. 13 East Twenty-sixth-street, north side of Madison-square, 20 by 70 by 197.8, for extending through to Twenty-seventh-street; said due $150,000. Also, four-story brown-stone house and Columbia College lease of lot, No. 9 West Fifteenth-street, 28 by 60 by 100.

By W. N. Pooley & Co., No. 23 Union-square, one lot, 25 by 100, on the west side of the Grand Boulevard, 94 feet north of Ogden-avenue, Fort-ward; sold for $2,000.

By Neafie & Andrews, No. 1,531 Third-avenue, three-story and basement frame house and lot, on the north side of East Eighty-eighth-street, 181 feet east of First-avenue, sold for $7,250.

By Wm. H. Rayner, No. 216 Pine-street, one lot on the west side of Ninth-avenue, 75 feet south of Seventy-ninth-street, opposite Manhattan-square, sold for $7,500.

By Barton & Whitmore, No. 166 Broadway, one plot of land on the south-east corner of Tenth-avenue and Eighty-third-street, 75.8 by 100, sold for $23,000.

By E. K. Stevenson & Son, No. 11 Pine-street and No. 235 Fifth-avenue, four-story high-stoop brick house and lot No. 45 West Twenty-eighth-street, north side, between Broadway and Sixth-avenue, 21.4 by 98 by 100, sold for $45,000.

THE
Jacksonville, North-western & South-eastern Railway
FIRST MORTGAGE
7 PER CENT. GOLD BONDS
AT 85 AND ACCRUED INTEREST.
INTEREST PAYABLE IN NEW-YORK, LONDON AND FRANKFORT.

This road will connect JACKSONVILLE, on the Chicago and Alton Railroad, with MOUNT VERNON, and will furnish the Counties of Morgan, Sangamon, Minnehaha, Montgomery, Bond, Clinton, Marion, and Jefferson with facilities (long needed) to transport their crops to market.

At Virden, where the deposits of bituminous coal are seven feet in depth, a large business will be created for both the cheap transportation to accrue for the construction of this road to accomplish purpose.

Thirty miles from Jacksonville to Alden are already completed and fully equipped. Fifty miles will be finished in time to move the Autumn crops.

THE TOLEDO, WABASH, AND WESTERN RAILROAD,
THE PEORIA, PEKIN AND JACKSONVILLE RAILROAD,
THE CHICAGO AND ALTON R. R.,
THE INDIANAPOLIS AND ST. LOUIS RAILROAD,
THE TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD,
THE VANDALIA AND ST. LOUIS RAILROAD,
AND
THE ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R.,

Act as feeders to the road at various points.

In connection, also, with the important roads now centering at Mount Vernon and Evansville, most also accrue a large and remunerative traffic.

The road forms a part of a through route from St. Louis to the seaboard.

Running through a section of country thickly settled and producing large quantities of grain; and, hence, with not an acre of waste land to be found anywhere as proximity to the road, its local traffic alone will amply secure the cost of building.

The loan of bonds is limited to $20,000 per mile, and we offer only $800,000 on the thirty miles of road already completed and in successful operation.

When desired, the bonds will be registered with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company.

In view of the above facts, we recommend these Bonds on account of their ABSOLUTE SAFETY, and regard them, in every way, a choice security. Pamphlets will be furnished on application.

GIBSON, CASANOVA & CO.,

Lake Ontario Shore R.R.
7 PER CENT. GOLD
FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS
At 93 1-2 and Accrued Interest.

Issue $20,000 to the mile, in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000 and $5,000. This enterprise is undertaken with subscriptions to the Capital Stock of over $2,000,000. Sixteen miles of the Road are finished and in operation. 44 miles in addition fully graded, and a total length of 55 miles of track will be laid this season, while the whole Road, of about 150 miles, with the exception of 5 miles of easy work, is entered upon and contracted to be finished by responsible and wealthy parties within the ensuing year.

The Road will extend from the City of Oswego to Lewiston, on the Niagara River, with branches to Suspension Bridge and Buffalo, connecting at the Western terminus with the Great Western, the Canada Southern, and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroads, and at Oswego with the New-York Midland, and by way of the Midland with the proposed Boston, Hoosac and Oswego Railroad, which, when built, will thus provide a route from Chicago to Boston, 70 miles shorter than by any existing or contemplated line; connecting also at Oswego with the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad, and thence by the Vermont Central R. connection with the entire railroad system of Northern New-England; while connections at Oswego with the Syracuse and Oswego Railroad secure access to the coal fields of Pennsylvania.

With these connections a large through business is assured. Running through populous towns and villages, and a rich agricultural district, its local business alone will doubtless take care of the interest on the First Mortgage Bonds. The present value of the farm property of the six counties through which the road passes is $194,219,052
Annual production is 21,402,240

We confidently commend the above Loan as one of the most attractive and reliable ever offered. For sale by

FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND
THIRTY YEARS.
7 PER CENT. GOLD BONDS.

INTEREST PAYABLE APRIL AND OCTOBER. REGISTERED OR COUPON PAYABLE IN LONDON OR NEW-YORK, AT 90 AND ACCRUED INTEREST IN CURRENCY.

THIS ROAD, WITH THE CANADA SOUTHERN, FORMS THE NEW TRUNK AIR-LINE FROM BUFFALO TO CHICAGO. IT IS UNDER THE SAME CONTROL AND MANAGEMENT, AND IS BEING BUILT BY THE SAME PARTIES WHO BUILT THE CANADA SOUTHERN: MILTON COURTRIGHT, JOHN F. TRACY, DAVID DOWS, WILLIAM L. SCOTT, HENRY PARNAM, R. A. FORSYTH, JOHN M. BURKE, A. L. STEES, JR., ALL DIRECTORS BOTH IN THE CHICAGO AND NORTH-WEST AND THE CHICAGO AND ROCK ISLAND; GEORGE OPDYKE, OF THE NEW-YORK MIDLAND; SIDNEY DILLON, DANIEL DREW, JOHN ROSE, DAVID STEWART, SAMUEL J. TILDEN, KENYON COX, AND OTHER PROMINENT RAILROAD MEN. THE ROAD IS BEING RAPIDLY BUILT IN THE BEST POSSIBLE MANNER, WITH SIXTY-POUND STEEL RAILS THROUGHOUT ITS ENTIRE LINE, AND WILL BE COMPLETED DURING THE COMING YEAR; NEARLY ONE-HALF OF THE ROAD WILL BE COMPLETED AND IN RUNNING ORDER BY THE 1ST OF JANUARY NEXT, SO THAT THE ENTIRE LINE, FROM BUFFALO TO CHICAGO, WILL WITHIN THAT TIME BE IN SUCCESSFUL OPERATION. THE BUILDERS OF THIS ROAD CONTROL ENOUGH OF THE LEADING LINES RUNNING FROM CHICAGO TO INSURE AN ENORMOUS BUSINESS FROM THE START, TAKING INTO CONSIDERATION THE IMPORTANT FACT, PATENT TO ALL WHO STUDY THE STATISTICS OF TRADE, THAT THE PRESENT TRUNK LINES, NOW TAXED TO THEIR UTMOST CAPACITY, ARE NOT AFFORDING FACILITIES EQUAL TO THE GREAT AND CONSTANTLY-INCREASING DEMAND FOR TRANSPORTATION, AND THAT THIS ROAD, THROUGH ITS ENTIRE LENGTH, BEING PRACTICALLY STRAIGHT AND, LEVEL AND SHORTER BY THIRTY-FIVE MILES THAN BY ANY OTHER NOW BUILT, OR THAT CAN BE BUILT, it must be apparent that this line is not only needed, but must be a great success. The proceeds of these Bonds will complete and equip the entire road, and we confidently recommend them as a most safe and profitable investment.

NOTICE.

The growth of the West and South-west and the vast increase of business of this Company demanding more therefor have created the necessity of new rolling-stock, side-tracks, and terminal facilities entirely inadequate to meet the wants of the public.

To provide the means necessary to make these additions and improvements also to construct double and yards for handling coal at Cleveland, and to enable the Company to join other railway companies contracting at Columbus, Ohio, and Indianapolis, Ind., in the erection of Union Passenger Depots suitable for the future requirements of those rapidly-growing cities, the Board of Directors have decided to issue and sell ten thousand shares of the unissued capital stock of this Company, being the total capital $10,000,000.

NEW-YORK CITY NEWS.

MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Seventh Annual Dinner—Speeches of Chauncey M. Depew and Others—Interesting New-York History.

The seventh annual dinner of the Officers' Union of the Mercantile Library Association, which was given, last night, at Delmonico's, Fourteenth-street, was attended by upward of a hundred members and invited guests. Mr. D. F. Appleton, President of the Association, sat at the head of the table, with Rev. Dr. Ormiston, Rev. John Cotton Smith, and Messrs. Charles O'Conor, Peter Cooper, and Isaac E. Bailey, on his right; and Mr. W. H. Smith, of London, Ireland, M. P., Rev. Dr. Potter, Hon. William E. Dodge, "Eli Perkins," Bret Harte, Edmund Yates, and ex-Judge Henry E. Davies, on his left. The Chairman, at the close of the dinner, proposed the first toast of the evening, "The City of New-York," and called upon Mr. O'Conor to respond.

Mr. O'Conor, in responding to the toast, said: Rarely appearing in the character of an after-dinner speaker, I yet feel constrained to accept the invitation of the chairman, and to make a short speech according to the intimation just given. There is much in the subject of the toast, and the occasion is one on which a great deal might be said. The Chairman has spoken of the rapid advance, the growing greatness of this City. It has been my fate to have lived in it close on to seventy years. As I first remember it, its population, that of the whole island, did not exceed 80,000. We went, in those days, to the pretty little village of Brooklyn in a small boat, having no other means of conveyance; and as for Jersey City, and its population—if, I believe, 50,000, there was quarter of a ninety hundred—it was not altogether. When I was first acquainted with this City, we had a little park, with a little fence around it; and our houses, many of them were one-story and two-stories high, and generally of brick. It was little New-York when I first knew it, but now to what has it grown? Its population exceeds a million, with a wealth beyond the conception of the men of that day; a vast population, embracing persons of every variety and capacity; men skilled in the arts and sciences, and in every branch of trade and commerce, presenting a picture of prosperity and enjoyment unsurpassed exceeding anything that could have been dreamed of in the New World. I have great reason, and we all have, to be proud of our great City, and delighted with the eminence and majesty which it has reached. And the part that your Association has taken in its growth will not be forgotten. Doubtless there are many of you who remember how comparatively trifling it was when a few merchants' clerks sat down together and planned this association, which has contributed so greatly to civilization. The young apprentice merchants who studied at its shelves, and who have since filled all the avocations, all the branches of trade, making your society a kind of foster-parent to the great mercantile class of princely New-York. (Applause.) I look upon that particular day with no small amount of sympathy, for it was at that particular year and time that I first set down my study in the profession in which my recent engagements, perhaps, constitute the reason why your Chairman was so kind as to invite me to respond to this toast. (Applause.) So, in some sense, I may say that I am about as old as the Mercantile Library. But besides this mere physical greatness, this mere capacity for the transaction of business, besides this intellectual eminence, there are other qualities in which I feel no little pride. New-York is a great mercantile centre, in which the principles of rectitude in mercantile honor have received their most marked and distinctive support. The proposition of mankind seems to be that America is the United States, and that the United States is the City of New-York. This is the central point on which all eyes are turned, and it is for us to rise to the highest level required of us, for as we do it, just in that proportion will America be honored among mankind. This has been the general character of New-York; and yet it does seem, as a consequence, I believe, of our prosperity and the enlargement of our associations, that its Government had been overlooked by the mercantile class of this great City. Overlooked by them, it fell, of course, into the hands of the trading politicians; and then demoralization stepped in and progressed until it reached its climax in 1871. Then, sentiment, whatever may have been the cause, was announced to the world that the New-York Legislature was not pure; that New-York's Executive—her administration—was marked by peculation and dishonesty, and that though the plunder was extensive, it was said that in our prosperity we sleep upon our rights, and disregarded our duties which would have upheld our honor. It was said that dishonesty also existed in that which had been so honored in the parent state for centuries—I mean our glorious judiciary. Mr. O'Conor here briefly alluded to the reform movement which swept over New-York in 1871, and said that its reputation had been re-established, and whatever blame there was attached to its fame, had been wiped away. In closing he declared that it was enough to make the heart of any man glad to see, at the recent election, two men nominated for the office of Chief Magistrate of this State as eminent for their moral purity as John A. Dix and Francis Kernan. (Loud applause.)

"The Merchants of New-York" was responded to by Mr. Dodge, "The Clergy" by Rev. Dr. Potter, and "The Young Men of New-York" by Mr. Wm. H. Bogart. The following officers of the Union were then elected for the year 1873:

President, M. C. D. Borden; Vice-President, Henry L. Pierson, Jr.; Corresponding Secretary, Wm. H. Maxwell; Recording Secretary, Hastings Grant; Treasurer, Peter Voorhis; Directors, John Crerar, Wm. H. Wickham, Seymour A. Bunce, Nathaniel D. White, Charles T. Carlton, Samuel Putnam, Charles F. Allen.

Besieging an Election Box—A Novel Procession on Broadway—Remarkable Feast of a Greeleyite.

One of the most novel of the various wagers and agreements made on the result of the Presidential election, was settled last evening. In the early part of the campaign, Mr. Lionel Keene agreed to take Mr. W. H. Van Gieson on his back from the Lincoln monument in Union-square, down Broadway to a saloon in West Houston-street, should Grant be elected. Mr. Van Gieson agreeing to dress himself as a colored recruit, and parade on Broadway, in case of Greeley's election. Last evening was the time originally fixed on for the consummation of the agreement, and at 8 P. M. precisely, the parties arrived at the square in coaches, accompanied by a trucksul of musicians. The procession was quickly formed, headed by the truck, containing a number of the friends of both parties, immediately followed by about a hundred citizens, the musicians coming next, and last of all the luckless Keene, bearing his successful opponent on his back, surrounded and followed by a crowd of friends carrying illuminated Chinese lanterns. The procession left the square in good order and marched down Broadway, the rear accompanied by an immense crowd. The passers by took in the situation at a glance, and as a general rule joined in. Keene walked at a rapid rate until reaching Bleecker-street, when he halted for a few minutes, according to agreement. He had now only a few blocks to go and started manfully for it. As the procession turned into Houston-street, one of the crowd added no little to the general merriment by exclaiming, "Now we're on the homestretch." The goal, situated five blocks down the street, was duly reached, and the crowd dispersed with three cheers for the plucky Keene. The entire journey, including the stoppages, was accomplished in a little over twenty-seven minutes, a somewhat remarkable feat, as Keene weighed some twelve pounds less than the individual on his back.

Arrest on Suspicion of Murder.

On the night of the 18th of June last, Anthony Marc, a German, residing at No. 102 Franklin-street, Brooklyn, E.D., while on his way home, was attacked at the corner of Harrison-street and Willoughby avenue by two men who knocked him down and beat him until he was insensible. On the following morning a police officer found Marc lying still unconscious where the affray occurred, and caused him to be taken home, where he lingered a few days and expired, without having returned to consciousness. Marc's wife made inquiry among the neighbors, and ascertained that Stephen Grundley, a lager-beer seller in the vicinity of Harrison-street and Willoughby-avenue, saw Marc passing, and asked him if he was not going to stop in and spend a quarter. Marc said he would not, whereupon Grundley and another man named Ludwig Berck, assaulted and beat him. A warrant was issued, and the two men were arrested yesterday, and taken before Justice Walsh, who held them for examination.

The Official Count in Brooklyn.

The most complete returns of the election in Brooklyn and Kings County yet received were published in the TIMES of yesterday. A few districts are still missing, and it is reported that the books were stolen. At all events, they have mysteriously disappeared. They would not, however, alter the results as given, though they might vary the majorities slightly.

Personal.

Hon. Caleb Cushing, of Massachusetts; Hon. R. S. Burwell, of Albion, N. Y.; Gen. G. P. Ihrie, of Washington; Dr. James Hall, of Baltimore; G. C. Reid, of the United States Navy, and H. H. C. Drummond, of the United States Army, are at the Astor House. Hon. Geo. F. Hoar, of Massachusetts; Wm. Williams, Member of Congress, of Buffalo; William E. Chandler, of New-Hampshire, and John S. Eldridge, of Boston, are at the Fifth-avenue Hotel. Hon. B. W. Kellogg, of Connecticut; Gen. R. F. Bullard, of Troy, and Capt. C. H. Tyler, of St. Louis, are at the Grand Central Hotel. Hon. E. E. Smith, of Ohio, and Dr. J. H. Thompson, of Washington, D. C., are at the St. Nicholas Hotel. Capt. McMaster, of the steam-ship Celebrian, is at the New-York Hotel. George L. Ossood, of Boston, is at the Clarendon Hotel. David A. Wells, of Norwich, Conn., is at the Albemarle Hotel. Frederick Billings, of Vermont, is at the Brevoort House.

FEARFUL MURDER.

A Cabinet-Maker Dying in Brooklyn from the Effects of a Blow with a Hammer.

On the afternoon of Oct. 29, George Schwartz, a cabinet-maker, residing at No. 104 Montrose-avenue, Brooklyn, E. D., became involved in a quarrel with a fellow-workman named Jacob Fredricks, at Kerr & Kellner's cabinet factory, in Gocrck-street, New-York, and during the quarrel Fredricks, it is alleged, struck Schwartz several blows on the head and body with a hammer, inflicting injuries, which will in all probability result fatally. Schwartz was taken to his home, and has since continued to grow worse. On Thursday afternoon his condition was such that it was deemed advisable to take his ante-mortem statement, which was as follows:

My name is George Schwartz; I reside at No. 104 Montrose-avenue, Brooklyn; on Oct. 29, 1872, while at work in the furniture shop of Kerr & Kellner, at No. 186 Gorck-street, New-York, at my trade, a piece of wood which I was working at projected over on Jacob Fredericks's bench; he ordered me to take it out of the way, calling me a very bad name; I told him I could not help it; soon after Fredericks went out of the shop, and I did not see him until one or two o'clock P. M.; he had gone out about seven o'clock A. M.; Fredericks, when he came back, seemed to be under the influence of lager-beer; he commenced to work at his bench; he came up into me before 8 o'clock, swearing at me while he was working; I was working at my bench; he swore at me and I said nothing, and was working at my bench, when Fredericks, who had a hammer in his hand, suddenly struck me on the head with it; I fell on the floor, and he then struck me on the breast and shoulder; I managed to get up and reach my home; I did not previous to this assault made on me, do anything to Fredericks in any way whatever; I had never given him any provocation on my part—on the day I was assaulted Fredericks had said to me that he would fix me.

A warrant was immediately issued for the arrest of Fredericks.

A Murderer Pardoned.

Joel B. Thompson, who was four years ago sentenced to be imprisoned in Clinton prison for twenty years and six months, for killing Thomas H. Bailey, engineer of the Rarken steamer, of Troy, for an alleged insult to his sister, has been pardoned by Gov. Hoffman. The Troy Times says:

"The Governor, for a year past, has been strenuously urged by men who are supposed to have great influence over him, to grant the pardon. Among the parties who have interested themselves in the matter the name of Col. Churchill, of Albany, appears to be the most prominent, and it is said that mainly through his efforts the Governor was induced, some months ago, to promise to sign the pardon immediately after the election. Thompson has been in prison for nearly seven years. Since that fatal Saturday night when he sent the bullet that penetrated Bailey's heart on his fatal mission he has not been free at an hour. His devoted mother has been untiring and unceasing in her efforts to procure his pardon. Now that he is again a free man, it is hoped he will show by an exemplary course of life that he has deserved mercy. He is a man of ability, and if he will avoid evil associates and intoxicating liquor, there is no reason why he should not become a useful citizen."

The Late Season in Texas—Effects of the Drought.

From the Houston Telegraph, Oct. 31.

The long season of drought that has prevailed in Texas, and which, happily for cisterns and turnip patches, has now ended in the rains everywhere, came at a time when it could do but little hurt to any of our varied crops. The wheat and corn crops reached perfect maturity while the long season continued, and yielded an almost unexampled abundance from the red hills of the eastern and central thickets of the west.

The cotton crop suffered considerably in some localities in the uplands, but the bottom lands have shown their usual large yields, while it may be said that the whole crop will not fall much below a full average. And just here we would mention a fact not always taken into account, and that is that planters frequently call a half crop the half of what their lands have yielded in the most prolific seasons, and not the half of an average good crop. This may accomplish some of the errors into which statisticians have fallen in their estimates of incoming cotton crops.

As a general thing dry seasons are the best for cotton, and the yields are generally in such seasons above estimates. This one will not prove an exception to the rule. The dry weather of August, September and October was opportunities for gathering the crop never surpassed, probably, in the history of this State, and while on the low lands, much of the staple is yet in the fields, nearly all of the upland crop is in the pick-room waiting to be ginned. We repeat that Texas has escaped damage from the fortuitous failing of the drought in Summer and Fall months, and to all she world we say, come and participate with us in the great plenty that prevails in consequence throughout our borders.

The Returning Japanese Young Women.

From the San Francisco Bulletin, Oct. 29.

Misses Bijo Yoshimas and Tido Mooqaedo, two Japanese young ladies, arrived from the East, Sunday, in company with Mrs. T. Antisell, wife of Prof. Antisell, of the Capron Commission in Japan, who is on her way to Yokohama to join her husband. These young ladies came here with the Embassy, last Winter, and were taken East with four others, and left in an American family, that they might secure an English education and become acquainted with American customs. Miss Yoshimas, who is a handsome and decidedly interesting young lady, has taken ill a few months since, and, as the climate disagreed with her, Minister Mori deemed it expedient that she should return home. Miss Mooqaedo was delegated to return with her as a companion. During their stay in the East the young ladies acquired a good knowledge of English, discarded their rich Oriental costumes, and assumed the garb of fashionable American girls, and now present a stylish appearance. Misses Yoshimas and Mooqaedo are stopping at the Grand Hotel. They return home by the next steamer.

An Unexpected Scene at a Rehearsal.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal, Nov. 3.

While the players at the Opera-house were rehearsing, about an hour before the matinee, yesterday afternoon, a drunken fellow named Henry J. Divlin entered the house, and made his appearance upon the stage in a manner that was truly tragic. He inquired in a stentorian and commanding voice for Miss St. Johns, saying at the same time that she was his master, and that he was going to take her off the stage or kill her. Col. Fuller advanced toward him to put him out of the house when Divlin drew a pistol and flourished it in a threatening manner. Mr. Dick Moore rushed to the scene, and seizing the weapon wrested it from the grasp of the would-be murderer. Private Watchman George Green also came up, and arrested him and turned him over to Officer Carney, who led him off and locked him up in jail. Miss St. Johns, it is said, made her début on the stage this season, and had thus roused the ire of her unmistakable brother, who imagined, while under the influence of benzine, that he would rather see her dead than that she should lead the life of an actress.

Re-Endowment of a Texas University.

From the Houston Telegraph, Oct. 31.

At a late meeting of the Baptist State Convention a movement was commenced to re-endow the Baylor University. Through the disasters and reverses of the war, the endowment of this institution has been reduced to about 100 acres of land and $10,000 of interest-bearing securities. Nearly $9,000 in notes were subscribed as Independence for endowment of the Presidency, (besides about $7,000 also subscribed for endowment of the Presidency of Female College.) This sum of $9,000, added to the $3,000 of old endowment considered good, will leave $9,000 to be obtained for the Presidency. The endowment of the chair of Natural Science is supposed to be good for $7,000. It is proposed to increase this by $6,000 more. The cons, an appeal will be made to the citizens of the State to endow, one by one, four more chairs.

Fully endowed, Baylor University will educate all properly-recommended students for the Christian ministry who depend on their salaries for a support.

Bryant's Letter Introducing Sully.

Philadelphia papers publish the following letter of introduction given the portrait-painter Sully, recently deceased, by Washington Irving:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 4, 1867.

I hardly need introduce the bearer, Mr. Sully, to you, as I trust you recollect him perfectly. His purpose passing the Winter in your city, and, as he will take with him many "strangers and sojourners" in the land, I would solicit for him your good graces. He is a gentleman for whom I have a great regard, not merely on account of his professional abilities, which are highly promising, but for his amiable character and engaging manners. I think I can not render him a favor for which he ought to be more grateful than in introducing him to the notice of yourself and your connections. Mr. Hoffman's family is all well, and you are often the subject of their conversation. Remember me affectionately to all the family. Excuse the liberty I have taken, and believe me, with the warmest friendship,

Ever yours,

WASHINGTON IRVING.

Miss REBECCA GRATZ, Philadelphia.

Rev. Wm. J. Alston will be installed pastor of St. Philip's Church, colored, to-morrow morning. Bishop Potter will preside.

Workmen have been for several days past erecting an improvement and meeting on several of the rooms of the new Court-house.

In the report of pew selling at St. Bartholomew's Church in yesterday's TIMES, the word "rent" was by an error used instead of valuation.

The Board of Managers of the American Institute Exhibition, at a meeting last evening, decided to extend the time for closing to Nov. 20, instant.

At 2 o'clock yesterday morning, a fire occurred on the second floor of No. 203 Lewis-street, occupied by Palmer & Embury, furniture manufacturers. Damage $100.

It was remarked in the United States Courts yesterday that Mr. E. Delafield Smith would, probably be Judge Noah Davis' successor in the office of United States District-Attorney.

The remains of Peter Kelly, of No. 515 Washington-street, were found yesterday, in the basement of the house of Lawrence Marsh, Hudson-street, and were removed to his late residence for inquest.

In the District-Attorney's office there is weeping and wailing. All are preparing for the grand stampede, and little is heard save abuse of the candidates of Tammany and Apollo Hall by the followers of these respective parties.

At the Yorkville Police Court, yesterday, Thomas McCormack, Thomas Jefferson, and Henry Ottenburgh were locked up on a charge of breaking into the hat and cap store of Frederick Lavin, No. 478 Third-avenue, on Thursday night.

The Board of Trustees of the General Theological Seminary decided, yesterday, not to fill the vacancies caused by the death of Rev. Drs. Vinton and Seabury until the next annual meeting of the Board, which will be held in June next.

Prof. Elsbury delivered a lecture last evening before the Polytechnic Branch of the American Institute, in Room No. 24 Cooper Institute, on "The Physical Basis of Musical Expression." There was a large attendance, and the lecture was much appreciated.

At Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, James McInnis, of No. 161 West Twenty-seventh-street, was committed for trial, on a charge of having snatched a pocketbook, containing $12, from Mrs. Mary Tyson, of No. 76 West Thirty-fifth-street, in a Sixth-avenue car.

The Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, confirmed the decision rendered by Judge Fancher a few days since, denying a motion to vacate an order of arrest under which Robert R. Raymond is imprisoned at Ludlow-street Jail, on a charge of having embezzled the moneys of the Wilmington Coal Company.

In the Court of General Sessions yesterday, before Judge Bedford, George Strauss, for obtaining money under false pretenses, was sent to Sing Sing for three years; William Fremont, convicted of grand larceny, was sent to the school-ship; McGovern, convicted of forgery, was sent to the Penitentiary for six months.

Under a decision of the Supreme Court rendered last week, Commissioner Noah Davis, Commissioner of Public Works, yesterday made requisition upon the Department of Finance for the sum of $22,840.68, to be deposited in the Chemical National Bank, to meet the payroll of laborers, &c., employed on the Boulevard and avenues for the two weeks ending on Saturday last.

The Grant and Wilson Club of the Seventeenth Assembly District celebrated last evening the election of Hon. Geo. B. Fallon, as Congressman for that district by the discharge of 100 guns. A brilliant display of pyrotechnics enlivened the scene, and under the superintendence of Capt. Samuel Minnes the programme of the evening was judiciously carried out. Mr. Mellish addressed the assemblage.

The New-York Alumni Association of Madison University, had a pleasant reunion on Thursday evening last at the residence of Rev. G. F. Pentecost, Brooklyn. Rev. Dr. Lathrop, of Stamford, Conn., presided. A resolution was adopted, recommending to the attention of the General Alumni Association the propriety of erecting a monument over the grave of the late President, Rev. Dr. Geo. W. Eaton.

Joseph McGovern, a brother-in-law of James O'Brien, on Thursday night assaulted Officer Downey, of the Twenty-first Precinct, because the latter talked of O'Brien's defeat. The officer clubbed McGovern, and took him to the Station-house. He was taken to the Yorkville Police Court yesterday, and was discharged, Justice Somerindyke saying that he had been punished enough by the officer.

A fire occurred at 7 o'clock yesterday morning on the third floor of the premises No. 566 Broadway, occupied by W. P. Acton, tailor, Thomas Roll & Co., millinery goods, and A. J. Katen, jeweler. The aggregate loss of these occupants is estimated at $1,000. The second floor is occupied by R. Marsh, lottery agent; damage $200. The first floor is occupied by A. W. McKinley, clothier; damage, $100. Damage to building, $1,000.

Assistant District-Attorney Fellows was unable to address the jury in the General Sessions Court yesterday in consequence of hoarseness contracted during the recent election. He remarked to Judge Bedford solo rose that this efforts did not appear to produce a very profound effect, and that for all the good he did he might have remained away from political meetings. Bedford significantly nodded, coincided with the opinion of the "Colonel."

BROOKLYN.

Chief Supervisor Jones is investigating charges against the authorities of the Poor-house and Lunatic Asylum for having, as it is alleged, conveyed the lunatics in carts to the polls on Tuesday last, to vote.

At 10 o'clock A. M. yesterday, a new two-story brick building, at the corner of Harrison-avenue and Howe-street, fell with a tremendous crash. Thomas Swift, Michael Benegan, and Martin Eagan, who were working about the premises at the time, were caught by the falling walls, and severely though not dangerously injured.

The divorce case of Sophia C. Davis vs. William Davis, was before Judge Pratt, in the Supreme Court, yesterday, on application for temporary alimony during the pendency of an appeal from a decision which refused a divorce, but directed the defendant to pay $3,000 to a receiver, to be invested for the plaintiff's use. The defendant is a wealthy hotel-keeper in Suffolk County, and the ground for the suit for divorce is cruel treatment.

LONG ISLAND.

The Port Jefferson Bible Society will hold its annual meeting to-morrow.

A new organ, costing $2,800, will be placed in the Second Presbyterian Church at Huntington next week.

The official returns for Suffolk County give a majority of 1,679 for Gen. Grant, and 1,977 for Gen Dix.

The Suffolk County Temperance Society will hold a Convention at Sayville next Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Wauspeo Hotel, of Cold Springs, was destroyed by fire a few days ago, which caught, it is supposed, from a defective flue. There was but little insurance on the building.

The Winter meeting of the Queens County Agricultural Society will be held at the Fair Grounds at Mineola, on Monday, when premiums will be awarded for Winter crops, cereals, dressed poultry, &c. The annual election of officers of the Society will be held at the same time.

James M. Oakley, the only Democrat elected to any office in Queens County at the late election, appears likely to lose his election through alleged fraud. The official returns give him 139 majority for member of Assembly from the Second District, but his election will probably be contested, from the fact that in the Second Ward of Long Island City, the Supervisors of elections and the Marshal were driven from the polls, and more votes were cast than there are electors in the ward.

STATEN ISLAND.

At the late election every colored man in Richmond County voted the Republican Electoral ticket.

NEW-JERSEY.

There are in the Essex County Jail 185 prisoners, of whom thirty-seven are females. The jail is overcrowded.

The Essex and Union County Boards of Canvassers yesterday met in their respective counties, and after organizing, adjourned until this morning.

William, alias "Mush" McDonald, who escapes from the Essex County Jail by cutting through the roof and swimming the North Canal a year ago, was yesterday captured in Newark, and recommitted.

The Grant and Wilson organizations of Newark had a grand parade last evening to celebrate the Republican victories. The display was under the command of Major Charles Courtois, and the companies were fully represented.

William Thompson, an aged and decrepid inmate of the Hudson County Almshouse, who accidentally drowned in a great vat of Shake Hill, on Thursday evening, he had been out walking, and, as he was nearly blind, it is supposed that he fell into the crock without seeing his danger.

Mr. Keer, a resident of William-street, Newark, having lost a wager on the general election, paid it yesterday afternoon by mundiller the winner in a wheelbarrow from the Court-house to Military Park. The party was accompanied by a fife and drum. Today, John Holmes will pay a similar bet by wheeling John Campbell one mile through the streets of Bellerville.

Shortly before noon, yesterday, Patrick Haggerty was almost instantly killed by falling from a new building in course of erection in Bergen Point. Haggerty was a tinsmith, living on Pine-street, in Elizabethport, and was employed in roofing the new building. He slipped from his position on the roof, and fell thirty feet, crushing his skull. Deceased was only twenty years of age.

Col. Henry M. Baker, who served for some time during the rebellion, and was well known, died at his residence on Bergenwood-avenue, Jersey City, on Thursday night, in his fifty-second year. He went out in 1861, in command of the Second New-Jersey Regiment, and on its disbandment became Colonel of the Eighty-sixth New-York Regiment, belonging to Gen. Meagher's Irish Brigade.

Alexander McClure, a brakeman on the Erie Railroad, was almost instantly killed yesterday while engaged in coupling the cars of a freight train near the tunnel. He was standing on the platform and had thrown between the cars, as they fell together. The body was terribly mangled. Deceased was a resident of Oil City, Penn., where he had a family residing. He had been employed on the Erie Railway only a short time, and boarded on Pavonia-avenue, Jersey City.

BUSINESS.

The market toward the close of the week was dull, the excitement that prevailed at the date of our last general review having passed off. Prices have declined at the principal points, crude at Parker's being sold at 30c.@35c. per barrel below last week's prices. Of course, there is a wide difference of opinion in regard to the future of oil. As a matter of course, both parties consider the lower prices. Refined is less firm; holders, however, are not inclined to make concessions in order to effect sales. They contend that prices will improve before long, and that they can wait.

Reported Ill-Effects of the Abolition of Hanging in Iowa.

From the Des Moines (Iowa) Register, Nov. 3.

The experiment of substituting imprisonment for life for hanging, as the punishment for murder, in Iowa, does not seem to give universal satisfaction. The Northern Iowa Synod of the Presbyterian Church, at its late session in Dubuque, passed a resolution declaring that the action of the last Legislature, in abolishing capital punishment, and substituting therefor imprisonment for life, was hasty and unwise, and recommending to all Christian people that petitions be circulated looking to the restoration of the law as it formerly stood. Their action has been indorsed by most of the leading journals of the State, one of whom, the Waterloo Journal, states that since the repeal of the death penalty, only six months ago, the increase in the ratio of crime has been enormous, and this fact, coupled with the interpretations of the law by the Courts in the cases of capital felons, has already created in some places a determination to resort to Lynch law, and administer unauthorized vengeance.

Probable Murder of a Greeley Elector in Pennsylvania.

From the Philadelphia Ledger, Nov. 5.

Yesterday, private advices were received in this city giving the outlines of a tragedy which occurred on Tuesday last in McConnellsburg, Fulton County, Penn. The circumstances leading to the tragic affair were not given, but it is alleged that Capt. George W. Skinner, whose name appeared second on the list of Greeley electors in this State, was struck on the forehead with a stone thrown by a man named Hammill, and injured so seriously that death will probably ensue. Mr. Kerper, a warm friend of Capt. Skinner, immediately drew his revolver and discharged it at Hammill. The ball flew wide of its mark, and took effect in the body of a bystander, named Capt. Welsh, almost instantly killing him. Capt. Skinner is well known throughout the State and in this city, having served for three terms in the Legislature, and was recently a candidate for a State office before a Democratic State Convention. He recently married Miss Parker, of Reading, Penn., and is at present engaged in the tanning of leather at or near McConnellsburg. Mr. Kerper is also extensively engaged in the manufacture of leather both at McConnellsburg and Reading, Penn. Capt. Welsh resided at "Burnt Bottom," Fulton County.
